Higher Than Pike's Peak.

Ask any schoolboy to give the highest point in the state of Colorado, and nine out of ten will name Pike's peak. Pike's peak is 14,110 feet above sea level, but there are many higher peaks in Colorado. Massive mountain, in Lake county, is one of the two highest points in the state, whose height has been determined by the United States geological survey and is 14,402 feet above sea level. Elbert mountain, in the same county, has the same elevation. Blanca peak, in Costilla, Heur-fano and Saguache counties, is 14,390 feet high; Castle peak, in Gunnison and Pitkin counties, is 14,250 feet high; Evans mountain, in Clear Creek county, 14,230 feet; La Plata peak, in Chaffee county, 14,332 feet; Quindary peak, in Summit county, 14,256 feet; San Luis mountain, triangulation station, in Mineral and Saguache counties, 14,149 feet; Uncompahgre peak triangulation station, in Hinsdale county, 14,206 feet, and Wilson mountain triangulation station, in Dolores county, 14,250 feet—all higher than Pike's peak.—Geological Survey Bulletin.

Sunset and Twilight.

Twilight is a phenomenon caused by atmospheric refraction. When the sun gets below the horizon we are not immediately plunged into the darkness of night. Although the sun is below our horizon, rays of solar light are bent or refracted by the terrestrial atmosphere and continue to furnish some slight illumination. The process continues with diminishing intensity until the sun is so far below the horizon that the refracting power of the atmosphere is no longer able to bend the rays enough to produce a visible effect. The time after sunset that the sun reaches such a position varies with the latitude of the place. There is less twilight at the tropic zone than at the temperate or frigid zone. This is due to less time taken by the sun's rays to pass through the atmosphere, at the tropic zone the sun's rays being perpendicular and at the temperate and frigid zones oblique.

LINCOLN'S ONLY WAR EXPERIENCE

Future President Twenty-Three When He Joined the Black Hawk Expedition.

CHOSEN CAPTAIN OF COMPANY

With Him Were Men Destined to Figure Prominently in Country's History—Spot Where Army Erected Fort Now Suitably Marked.

By LILIAN STAIR SCHREINER.

ONE of the most interesting events in the life of the great war president occurred at a time when he was little known to fame. This was in 1832, during the Black Hawk war, a war which, in proportion to the number of lives lost, caused more widespread fear and consternation than any other in the history of our country.

When the story of the battle at Stillman's Run, where a small band of savages put to flight a whole regiment of soldiers, and also that of the massacre at the Davis farm, where fifteen women and children were murdered, was spread through the country there was scarcely a farmhouse all through the middle West that was not deserted. Both of the places mentioned were in northern Illinois and soon stockade forts were thrown up and there the people flocked for protection from the vast horde of savages that they believed to be on their trail.

Governor Reynolds of Illinois on April 16, 1832, issued a proclamation for volunteers to organize against the savages, and Lincoln, then twenty-three years of age and living at New Salem, Sangamon county, Illinois, was one of the first to respond. The company was allowed to choose its own captain and much to his joy Lincoln received the largest number of votes. Of this incident he spoke in later years as follows: "Then came the Black Hawk war and I was elected captain of volunteers, a success which gave me more pleasure than I have had since."

In those early days Lincoln showed that same observance to justice and the rights of others which characterized his later years, in evidence of which may be noted the incident of the Indian's coming to General Cass with a letter recommending him for his services to the whites. Some of the men in the company wished him shot as a spy, but Lincoln promptly interfered, saying that this peaceable Indian should not be killed. There is no record to show but what his judgment was correct and his leniency well advised.

One of the most interesting facts in Lincoln's history at this time, and which shows what queer pranks fate can play, is this: Gen. Winfield Scott, then in command at Fort Snelling, sent two young lieutenants to muster in the Illinois volunteers. In the language of a memoir of the times, one of these lieutenants was "a very fascinating young man of easy manners and affable disposition, while the other was equally pleasant and extremely modest. It is further stated that "a tall, homely young man dressed in blue jeans" presented himself to the lieutenants as captain of a company of volunteers and was duly sworn in. The one who administered the oath of allegiance to the "young man in blue jeans" was the lieutenant of the fascinating manners above mentioned. This was Jefferson Davis. The young man in blue jeans was Abraham Lincoln, and the other young lieutenant was Robert Anderson, commander of Fort Sumter at the beginning of the Civil war. And no premonition told them, as they stood together on that pleasant spring morning, of the important parts they were each to play in that great drama of blood.

In that part of the war that was swamps and woods. Lincoln, a member of Early's company of rangers, took an active part in all the maneuvers, and when word was brought on the 8th of July by some Winnebago Indians that Black Hawk was hiding in the swamp on an island in Lake Koshkonong, five miles down the river, it was Early's company that was sent to reconnoiter. They crossed the river on rafts to the island, Lincoln among them, but the wily Hawk had flown.

This happened on the 9th of July. They returned up the river to the main command, and on the 10th of July Lincoln was mustered out of service. The next day he started out with his companions for his home in Illinois. That night his own horse and that of one of his comrades was stolen, and the rest of the distance was made on foot. Lincoln was very fond of talking in later life of his experiences in the Black Hawk war. On one occasion, in the fall of 1859, he was making speeches in Wisconsin. After speaking at Beloit he was conveyed by carriage to Janesville. They traversed the same route as that taken by the army in the Black Hawk war twenty-seven years before. Lincoln recognized it and talked freely about the events of that time, telling in his humorous way of the difficulties encountered in his journey home after his horse was stolen.

Gradually, however, in the three quarters of a century and more that have passed since the time when Lincoln and his comrades camped in the wilderness, the stockade posts rotted away until there was nothing to show where the fort had stood. Then the Daughters of the American Revolution of Fort Atkinson took the matter in hand and placed a memorial to mark the spot. It is a massive boulder of native stone with a tablet of Massachusetts granite upon which this inscription is engraved: "Near this spot in 1832 in the Black Hawk war, Gen. Henry Atkinson erected a stockade fort. To mark this historic ground the Daughters of the American Revolution of Fort Atkinson erect this memorial."
