MATTER HE HAD FORGOTTEN

Now Mr. Jones Knows That Others Besides Women May Be Possessed of Faulty Memories.

Speaking at a dinner, Senator George W. Norris of Nebraska referred to the beauty of having a good memory, and fittingly related this story:

"At eight o'clock in the morning one day last summer the Joneses took trunks, grips and suit cases, and hustled for the railroad station. Twenty minutes later a taxicab dashed up to the Jones house and out jumped Jones. "What's the matter, old man?" asked a kindly disposed neighbor. "Forget your railroad tickets?" "No," answered Jones, showing symptoms of peevishness. "My wife left a kettle of water boiling on the gas stove. Didn't think of it until we reached the station. You can always depend on a woman to have a memory like that."

So saying, Jones unlocked the door and hastened into the house. In about two minutes he came out again with his features puckered into a peculiar twist. "How did you find it?" cheerfully asked the neighbor. "Sizzling to beat a locomotive, I suppose." "No," guiltily answered Jones. "I had forgotten that I had turned the gas off at the meter."—Anon.

ARMY WASTE MADE TO PAY

Refuse From Military Kitchens Purchased and Made Use Of by the British Government.

British war efficiency is such that it is now able to save something out of army waste.

When it was found that thousands of tons of waste fats were being thrown away with other garbage from military kitchens investigations were made to determine whether some use could be made of these things. Now drippings, bones, butchers' fat and greases are being daily used in England in the making of soap, candles, fertilizers and also in supplying the explosives for 17,000,000 shells annually.

The government pays the army camps for the waste products taken. During the first month of the experiments the British committee on the purchase of army camp refuse bought 67,500 worth of fats, and this figure has soared until at the present time about $80,000 is paid to the camps each month.

The most recent development of this scheme is the extension of the plan to the naval forces and to troops over there, whether that be France or Palestine or Africa.

A SUGAR ROMANCE

By AGNES G. BROGAN.

Bruce Lynden came out to his sister's country home, to bid her farewell. He had been called to his country's colors and must leave soon for training camp.

Jane was glad to find that the serious anticipated departure, had not affected her brother's gay spirits. It was the same merry-hearted Bruce who sang gay songs to his own accompaniment. Jane's first suggestion of a young folk's party in his honor, had been discouraged; that was before the chance meeting with Sheila.

The charming little Irish girl had happened in at the post office as Jane and Bruce were leaving, and in the natural order of things, had walked with them to their door.

"Jove!" he remarked as his sister's young neighbor passed on her way. "What makes her so delightfully—different?"

"Because she is different, perhaps," Jane replied. "Comes from a broken home across the water, to live with her dominating grandmother."

"Bruce Lynden," she said slowly, "I do believe you have fallen in love."

"Believe?" that youth answered solemnly. "I know—I have."

"And I could not persuade you to look at a girl heretofore?"

"I'll look at this one quick enough," he responded, "if you will give me half a chance. Better have that party and ask her over."

"I doubt if she would be allowed to come," Jane said.

Sheila's voice over the 'phone came to Bruce as he bent his listening head above his sister's. "I cannot promise to come," the girl answered the invitation, "but will let you know later."

Jane put down the receiver impatiently. "It's always that way," she said. "Sheila has to depend until the last moment on her grandmother's humor."

Instantly Bruce became a rescuing knight. "I'd like to carry her off under the old woman's nose," he declared.

His sister laughed, but her eyes were tender, as she caressed the soldier's hair. She was so anxious at this time to give him every pleasure. And if he fancied himself in love with Sheila—well, who could be more worthy of love than that faithful girl?

Bruce was thoughtful as he passed through the dining room upon the following morning, then turned back to answer the telephone call. His heart gave a leap at the soft-toned voice; its message was direct, yet perplexing.

"Good morning," said Sheila. "Can you please send some sugar over to Mrs. Robson? Ever so little would be appreciated. I know you were obliged to refuse us yesterday, Mr. Schmidt, but grandmother—" the girl laughed, "won't be happy 'till she gets it."

It was evident that the operator had made a wrong connection. Bruce thought fast. The girl's acceptance of his sister's invitation depended on her grandmother's humor, and "grandma would not be happy until she had sugar."

Upon the buffet near at hand he prepared three small well-filled bowls. "All right," he answered, "I will bring you some in a few minutes."

Anne, the maid, stared at his request for a bag, but gave it, and when she had gone, Bruce promptly emptied into it the contents of two sugar bowls. A lad upon the street agreed to deliver the package and Bruce went hopefully upon his morning stroll. Returning later he found his sister telephoning excitedly.

"I have called up both grocers," she was saying, "and cannot get a bit. Oh! these war times! And how my own sugar disappeared, is a mystery. There were the bowls all filled for this evening's party—the smallest alone remains, and Anne knows nothing about it. Oh! if you could, dear, I'd be so grateful."

After luncheon Bruce fled guiltily to the sitting room. Here in unremorseful silence he smoked and smiled into the fire. His reverie was interrupted by the sight of a girlish figure ascending the porch steps.

Before the startled caller had time to press the bell he had thrown wide the door. "Come in," he eagerly invited.

But Sheila hesitated. "I came to bring some sugar to your sister," she explained; "we have more than we need at present. Will you give it to her, please? I am on my way to pay Mr. Schmidt for his accommodation." Breathlessly Bruce grabbed the bag. "Wait a minute," he begged. "I'd like to walk with you."

As he joined the girl on the snow-bordered path he decided that prompt confession was inevitable—this visit to the Schmidt person complicated matters. "As to that sugar," he began.

"Yes?" queried Miss Sheila.

"I filled the order this morning," he added abruptly. "You called our house by mistake for the grocer's. That was Jane's sugar—ready for the party."

The girl tilted her pretty chin and looked up at him, then her quick laughter rang out.

"It was to appease your grandmother," he explained, "so that you might come to my farewell party."

"Farewell?" asked Sheila. Her eyes shone softly. "I promised grandmother that I would not." Then suddenly she smiled at him. "Nothing was said against an afternoon walk," suggested Sheila. And they went on together down a glorified shining pathway.
