Prevention of Tomato Blight.

Preventive measures for tomato blight, a very serious disease on the Pacific Coast, include crop rotation, sterilization of soil by steam or boiling water, and planting resistant strains. The blight is considered to be due to a soil fungus that attacks and kills the feeding roots, says a new circular (105, Blight of Tomatoes), just issued by the Extension Service of the Oregon Agricultural College. The fungus can live on organic matter in the soil, beyond the reach of sprays. Hence control has not been gained, and the preventive measures are relied upon to avoid blight losses. Setting large transplants with special care not to injure the roots will help enable the plant to mature and bear fruit before the fungus invades the roots. Many growers prick off the plants into paper pots, in which they are allowed to grow to considerable size before set into the field.

Special Draft Calls Six Jackson County Men.

Portland, Or., April 17—Still another special draft call, the third in a little more than one month, has been made by the War Department.

Under this third call, Oregon is to furnish 251 for the service in the National Army, in addition to the 333 called out by the order of March 11, who have already reported at Camp Lewis; and the 923 who are to report to Camp Lewis in the five-day period beginning April 25.

The 251 men to be taken in the new special call are ordered to report to Fort McDowell, Cal., in the five day period beginning May 1. As this is an artillery training post, the supposition is that these men are to be put into the artillery, though no official announcement has been made to that effect. These 251 men constitute 3.4 per cent of Oregon's first gross draft quota.

All told, since March 11, a total of 1541 men from Oregon have now been called into military service through the draft. The state and various counties are to be credited later with these men against the net quota for the big draft call that is coming soon. The quota for Jackson County for this draft is 6.

Learning by Experience.
Experience keeps a dumb school, but fools will learn in no other, and scarce in that; for it is true, we may give advice, but we cannot give conduct. However, they that will not be counseled cannot be helped, and if you will not hear reason, she will surely rap your knuckles.—Franklin.
