DIRE MENACE TO TRAVELER

Stinging Tree of Queensland Is Frequently Fatal to Unobserving or Too Careless Hunter.

Although the tropical shrubs of Queensland are luxuriant and beautiful, they are not without their dangerous drawbacks, for there is one plant among them that is deadly in its effects. This is the stinging tree. If a certain portion of the traveler's body is burned by the stinging tree death will follow.

"Sometimes while shooting turkeys in the scrub I have entirely forgotten the stinging tree till warned of its close proximity by its smell," said a visitor to Queensland. "I was only once stung, and that very lightly. Its effects are curious; it leaves no mark but the pain is maddening, and for months afterward the part which touched is tender, in rainy weather or when it gets wet in washing."

"I have seen a man who treats ordinary pain lightly roll on the ground in agony after being stung, and I have known a horse so completely mad, after getting into a grove of these trees, that he rushed open-mouthed at everyone who approached him and had to be shot. Dogs, when stung, will rush about whimpering piteously, biting pieces from the affected part. The small stinging trees, a few inches high, are as dangerous as any, being hard to see and seriously impeding one's ankles."

The stinging tree emits a peculiar and disagreeable smell. It is best known, however, by its leaf, which is nearly round and has a point at the top.

ROMANTIC EPISODE. By J. ISABELLE BURNHAM.

"Now, what shall I do next?" thought mischievous little Miss Courtney Burke. She made a very pretty picture as she sat on the dark sofa, her golden head laid against it and her dark gray eyes gazing earnestly at the ceiling.

As she was sitting there her brother's little two-year-old girl came into the room. She toddled up to Courtney and said: "Me write letter to papa-papa, 'way off dere in France.'"

"What have you got, Helen?" Courtney asked her.

Helen held up a newspaper which showed several pictures of soldiers.

Suddenly Courtney's eyes danced merrily and she eagerly scanned the faces of the soldiers to find one to whom she thought the word "romance" would fit.

She came to the name of Lieut. Arthur Stanton. Then she stopped and looked at the half-finished sweater beside her.

"I'll finish this sweater," she said, "and there won't be any harm in writing a little note for a lonely soldier."

Accordingly, after the sweater was finished she wrote a cheery little note and signed her niece's name, "Miss Helen Burke," to it.

Time went on, and Courtney had very nearly forgotten about letters and sweaters, when a letter came for her little niece. Upon opening it she found a very interesting and grateful letter from Lieut. Arthur Stanton.

He thanked her for the sweater, also for the letter, which, he said, was the first that he had received from the good old U. S. A., closing by asking her to write as often as was possible.

Courtney wrote to him, and she received his nice letters, but all the while she had the guilty feeling that she was deceiving him.

A long time elapsed and the letters ceased. She wondered and watched for them. Until now, she did not know how much those letters had meant to her. She was angry with herself for thinking and feeling as she did. What did she know about him? Nothing, only what he had written her.

She soon had other things to take up her mind, as her brother had written that he was coming home on a short furlough.

It was a very warm day in June that Courtney had just finished combing her little niece's hair, as Helen's papa was expected home that day. There was a strong resemblance between the seventeen-year-old aunt and her little two-year-old niece.

The bell rang and Courtney jumped up and ran out of the nursery. She hurried to the door, but instead of seeing her brother, as she expected, she looked into the merry brown eyes of a young soldier.

"Does Miss Helen Burke live here?" he inquired politely.

Courtney replied in the affirmative and after asking him in she called her little niece.

The soldier expressed no surprise at seeing the little girl instead of a grown-up young lady, but he introduced himself as Lieut. Arthur Stanton.

Courtney turned red, then white. She didn't know whether to cry or to laugh, so she turned to the window until she could get control of herself.

What would she do? Here he was asking himself right at home, paying no more attention to her than if she wasn't there. Oh, dear! why did she write that letter? She might have known she would get into trouble—she always did. My, but he was a very good-looking fellow at that. Well, the only thing to do was to tell him the truth.

"Lieutenant Stanton, I wish to make an apology," she said.

He raised his eyebrows and stood up. His young figure was very erect, as he stood with his head thrown back, and she just couldn't help but admire the man. His black hair waved—she always did love curly hair.

Oh, why did he look at her so closely? It made things so much harder. "Oh, Helen," she said suddenly, "please go and get the newspaper in sister's room."

As the little one toddled away, Courtney looked at him again, and she thought, "how could I ever have done such a thing?"

Lieutenant Stanton stood waiting in silence for her to speak, and if there was a particle of fire in his dark eyes, she failed to see it.

She opened her lips to speak, then her face turned pale. He let her say a word, then spoke very gently: "Miss Burke, I think I know what you are about to say. Please don't apologize for anything. I know all about it."

OREGON WOMEN MUST UPHOLD SERVICE FAME.

By Mrs. Sarah A. Evans, State Chairman, Women's Liberty Loan Committee of Oregon.

"This is to be the best Liberty Loan!" These words we read to you, still thrilling with the joy that was ours when they came to us and to the promise of work entitled not for the fitting of a financial burden from which our shoulders had been freed, but for the sounding cry of victory, heralding a thanksgiving call to all the nations of the earth.

Six months ago we urged you to dedicate your services and your money to the use of the government that victory might be ours. The magnificent response from the women of Oregon and other states, by their concentrated loyalty and generous support played an important part in bringing joy to the world on the eleventh of last November. Our money, lavishly loaned and used, was the dynamic force that prostrated the German barbarian, and stopped the slaughter of our splendid manhood. The magnitude of our preparations struck terror to the enemy, for it implied the obligation America had taken upon herself, and her grim determination to see it through to a glorious finish.

SARAH A. EVANS

The victory has been won, but have we canceled all our obligations? Certainly not until we have paid every debt incurred in bringing about this victory. And honorably return home every soldier who made it possible.

Our thank-offering for the speedy close of the war, the thousands of lives spared, and the untold suffering thus saved must be the preservation of the financial stability of America, and a comprehensive readjustment of disturbed conditions. This can only be done by a generous and ready response to this last great call—THE VICTORY LIBERTY LOAN.

Let us rededicate ourselves and our treasures once more to the cause of peace, as did the wise men of old when they heard from the Jordan Hills the song of victory:

"Peace on Earth; good will to men."

Throughout the critical period Pvt. Kee showed extraordinary heroism, high courage, and persistent devotion to duty and totally disregarded all personal danger. By his determination he materially aided the regimental commander in communicating with the front line."
