MADE BY FRENCH SCULPTOR Interesting to Recall That Houdon Crossed the Ocean to Model Bust of Washington. Historical reminiscences, awakened by present relations between France and the United States, recalls that in the early days of the American republic French artists made the first sculptural representations of American men and events. America had portrait painters, as witness the surviving portraits of Washington, but no "statuaries," as sculptors were then called, of equal merit. The American Revolution was struck chiefly in France, and Houdon crossed the ocean to model the bust of Washington, necessary for his statue of the American general and president. It was a grave question whether the sculptor should clothe the general in modern costume or dress him, after the art fashion of the time, in the classic garb of a Roman, and, as the story comes down, it took the combined opinions of Washington, Jefferson and Franklin to secure a statue of the Father of his Country in his own proper garments.

Mineral That Can Be Molded. Charles E. Sweet has discovered a preparation of silver which may be made in a plastic form like wax or clay, and also thinned down to the consistency of paint, according to the Little Journal, Cambridge, Mass. Copper, copper alloys and bronzes may be worked in the same manner. By simple technology, the preparation may be reduced to the pure metal without any change in its form or shape. A sculptor may work it in the rough or in relief, just as he does his usual materials, or in dilution it may be applied to a metallic surface with a brush. It greatly simplifies the problem of artistic work of a high order, although, of course, it is more expensive than stamped wares. Medallions and figures may thus be presented in the original without the need of casting, and such articles as silver sets may be made of which every member is original and unique. It provides a new medium for artists. The invention has been patented.

He Wears a Necklace. Did you ever hear of a man wearing a necklace? Well, that is what the male Canadian warbler does, while on the female of this attractive bird there is only the slightest indication of a necklace, says the American Forestry association, Washington, which is conducting the nation-wide bird-house building contest among school children. The warbler's necklace of black spots shows up very strikingly on his olive-green and yellowish throat and breast. On the back the bird is of a slate gray color with the tail more of an olive-brown tone. This is a very lively bird. It is very seldom still for more than a few seconds before it dashes out at some tempting bit to eat. It is partial to the wooded banks of streams. It usually keeps in underbrush near the ground.

Shells as Feed. America possesses some of the largest chicken hatcheries in the world, a single establishment sometimes having a capacity of 225,000 eggs. One room in such a hatchery has 33,000 eggs in process of incubation at one time. An interesting by-product of the industry are the shells which accumulate in mountainous piles. They are not wasted, however, but are ground and sold to chicken raisers for feed, principally as bone builder, thus completing the cycle to everyone's satisfaction.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Ed Hobburn rose from his chair and stood looking out. Apparently he was in deep thought, but he really was beginning to become very angry. With a little start he turned to the girl on the sofa calmly humming a popular air.

"Peggy Starr, I wouldn't believe you would be so unaccommodating without saying a word from the patriotic point of view. It certainly wouldn't hurt you to help me out by just doing such a little thing as that."

"I've told you, I wouldn't be in that parade and I mean it. Why, Ed, do you think for a minute I would go riding all about the streets of this city mounted on an old wagon, and having every eye on the street corners looking me in the face. Well, I guess not," she ended with finality.

"Well, there's a good many girls that are going to be in it that are in even better society than you are, and they don't see anything the matter with it." "It doesn't make the slightest difference to me what anybody else does. Ed, so please let the matter drop. And if you would go along now it would be very nice of you, as I have a good many things to do this evening."

Ed noticed the chill note in her voice and took his hat without another word. The moment he had left the room, Peggy jumped up to go after him. With great effort she held herself back, but she continued to think of what she had said. She knew she had hurt Ed's feelings and it bothered her more than she cared to admit. Still thinking how mean she had acted, she was interrupted by the ringing of the telephone.

"Hello," said the voice of her chum, Helen Whitman. "Peggy, have you been asked to be in the parade next Monday?" "Yes, but I'm not going to do it," replied Peggy slowly.

"You're not? Why, Peg, I thought of course you were. Why, the idea, everybody is going to do something for that."

"Well, I for one, will be the laughing stock for nobody. If you want to be dressed up like a wax doll and set in a chariot for everyone to gaze at, you can, but I'm not going to."

"Some people give the boys a hearty welcome when they come home," came from Helen sarcastically as she replaced the receiver on the hook. After shutting off, Peggy got up with tears in her eyes. She had been looking at the celebration from her own standpoint, never giving a thought to whom it was really for. Quickly she took up the telephone and got the chairman of the committee on the line. "Mr. Wood? Well, this is Margaret Starr on Woodstead street. I understand you need somebody for a role in the parade. If it is convenient for you I will stop at your office on my way downtown."

The next day Peggy Starr started on a little visit to a neighboring city and when Ed called that evening he was told Miss Starr would return Monday. Of course, Ed firmly believed she had gone away in order not to be asked about the parade. With a little shrug of the shoulders he turned and went to his office. Twice between Friday evening and Monday morning he called her up via telephone, only to hear she had not returned and there was no message.

At last Monday came, the day of the great parade. The sun rose over the New England hills in the distance with alarming rapidity, and by ten o'clock the parade had formed in line. The floats were many and elaborate, but one in particular attracted much attention. The automobile was made into a modern chariot, with American flags covering the whole outside. Inside, the chariot was pure white, and on one end a high platform. One figure stood on this platform, "Columbia" by name, and at her feet sat two brave boys, one in blue and one in khaki. As the float moved slowly about the streets and "Columbia" stood holding her torch majestically above her head, everyone was thrilled. At last the route was covered and scores of people were crowding about the beautiful float. "Columbia" stepped from her platform where the radiant Ed was awaiting her.

"Peggy, is it really you doing this?" "Why, of course, it is I. Don't I look natural?" "But where have you been these last three days?" "Ed, you made me feel so ashamed the other day, I had to go somewhere, so I went down to Lancaster. I thought you'd be glad."

"Glad? Why I'm so glad I could cry, Peggy. You certainly are one of those Victory Girls."

"But, Ed, the greatest victory I've had is the one over myself. I have learned a good lesson and my pride will be better for it." With a happy sigh she laid her hand in Ed's.

Florida Language in Treaty. The language employed in treaties is usually of the most formal character, but occasionally, when treaties are concluded with eastern powers, a more Florida style is used. At any rate, according to a correspondent, a treaty between Great Britain and Persia bears "Praise be to God the All-Perfect and All-Sufficient. These happy leaves were newly plucked from the thorn-garden of concord, and tied by bonds of the plenipotentiaries of our great states in the form of a treaty in which the articles of

"You're not? Why, Peg, I thought of course you were. Why, the idea, everybody is going to do something for that."

"Well, I for one, will be the laughing stock for nobody. If you want to be dressed up like a wax doll and set in a chariot for everyone to gaze at, you can, but I'm not going to."

"Some people give the boys a hearty welcome when they come home," came from Helen sarcastically as she replaced the receiver on the hook. After shutting off, Peggy got up with tears in her eyes. She had been looking at the celebration from her own standpoint, never giving a thought to whom it was really for. Quickly she took up the telephone and got the chairman of the committee on the line. "Mr. Wood? Well, this is Margaret Starr on Woodstead street. I understand you need somebody for a role in the parade. If it is convenient for you I will stop at your office on my way downtown."

The next day Peggy Starr started on a little visit to a neighboring city and when Ed called that evening he was told Miss Starr would return Monday. Of course, Ed firmly believed she had gone away in order not to be asked about the parade. With a little shrug of the shoulders he turned and went to his office. Twice between Friday evening and Monday morning he called her up via telephone, only to hear she had not returned and there was no message.

At last Monday came, the day of the great parade. The sun rose over the New England hills in the distance with alarming rapidity, and by ten o'clock the parade had formed in line. The floats were many and elaborate, but one in particular attracted much attention. The automobile was made into a modern chariot, with American flags covering the whole outside. Inside, the chariot was pure white, and on one end a high platform. One figure stood on this platform, "Columbia" by name, and at her feet sat two brave boys, one in blue and one in khaki. As the float moved slowly about the streets and "Columbia" stood holding her torch majestically above her head, everyone was thrilled. At last the route was covered and scores of people were crowding about the beautiful float. "Columbia" stepped from her platform where the radiant Ed was awaiting her.

"Peggy, is it really you doing this?" "Why, of course, it is I. Don't I look natural?" "But where have you been these last three days?" "Ed, you made me feel so ashamed the other day, I had to go somewhere, so I went down to Lancaster. I thought you'd be glad."

"Glad? Why I'm so glad I could cry, Peggy. You certainly are one of those Victory Girls."

"But, Ed, the greatest victory I've had is the one over myself. I have learned a good lesson and my pride will be better for it." With a happy sigh she laid her hand in Ed's.

Florida Language in Treaty. The language employed in treaties is usually of the most formal character, but occasionally, when treaties are concluded with eastern powers, a more Florida style is used. At any rate, according to a correspondent, a treaty between Great Britain and Persia bears "Praise be to God the All-Perfect and All-Sufficient. These happy leaves were newly plucked from the thorn-garden of concord, and tied by bonds of the plenipotentiaries of our great states in the form of a treaty in which the articles of
