PIONEERS TO VISIT TRAIL

Ezra Meeker, George Himes
Clarence Bagley to Mark Old Spots.

Tacoma, Wash., July 8.—George H. Himes of Portland, accompanied by Ezra Meeker and Clarence B. Bagley of Seattle, will leave Steilacoom, Washington, near Tacoma, on July 12 for a tour of old historical roads. They will go over Naches pass, which was used by the first party to cross the Cascades in 1857. Mr. Himes was a member of this group. The pioneers will locate the best spots to place markers to be erected by the Washington State Historical society.

The combined ages of Messrs. Himes, Meeker and Bagley totals 238 years.

Mexican Tests Plane.

Mexico City, July 8.—Carlos Santana, well known in Mexico as an aviator, recently established a record for the republic in sustained aerial flight, remaining in the air 15 hours and 15 minutes. The flight was destined as a test for a new 130-horse-power motor which has been built in Mexico.

Fireworks Start Blaze at Eugene

Eugene, Or., July 5.—An unsheduled event on the Fourth of July program took place here last night when fireworks set off on the Butte north of the city ignited the dry grass on the hillside. The fire flared up illuminating the entire northern end of the city and embellished the effect of the powder fire works considerably.

PROPER AMERICAN IS SIMS

Many Reasons Why Rear Admiral Has Obtained and Retains General Popular Regard.

Rear Admiral Sims came quietly into town the other day, made a speech or two, and when he left he had Washington hanging to his very abbreviated jacket tail. Folks here certainly did like the admiral. A popular idol that obtains the plaudits of Washington is pretty good.

These are some of the things the people liked about the admiral: He said very positively that he will not write a book on the war; he referred to the navy's part in the war as its "stunt"; he boasted General Pershing to the skies, indicating that the admiral is without a jealous streak; he referred jocularly to himself as "the only rear admiral in captivity," and said he was glad to exhibit himself if the folks wanted to see him; and, best of all, he took time to talk with every one who could squeeze a word into his ears.

Down at the Union station, when the admiral was boarding his private car, a gray-haired woman rushed up and shook his hand warmly.

"This is the proudest day of my life, admiral," she said. "I now have shaken hands twice with you."

"All right, my dear lady," the admiral replied, raising his cap. "I'm glad if meeting me pleases you. Come around again the next time I'm in town and we'll shake a third time."

If any further proof that the admiral is human were needed, it might be stated that he plays a rattling game of handball.—Washington Star.

OLD THINGS UNDER THE SUN

Democracy in Ancient Jewish Days and the League of Nations, Are Two.

The democratic idea is of great antiquity, the Christian Herald reminds its readers. Under the prophets and Judges, Israel was a democracy. It was not until they were fascinated by the barbaric splendor and unrestrained license of the heathen nations around them that they began to be dissatisfied with their own simple ways and to long for a king and a showy court. It was the lure of sin and worldly vanity. Samuel warned them against courts and kings and told them of what would happen, but his warnings went unheeded. The vision of the age of peace began as early as eight centuries B. C., but it was not until the Christian era that the world change in the existing order fully dawned upon the minds of men. The idea of a league of nations is not new. Such a league was foreshadowed by Jann Roch, in his remarkable book, "The Future of War," issued 20 years ago. It was also foreseen by Emmanuel Kant, who, in his essay on "Perpetual Peace," wrote that the law of nations must be based on the federation of free states. At different times leaders in national and international reform have had visions of such a league, but always as a possibility of the remote future. It has remained for the United States to promulgate it at a time when the world seems prepared to listen.

Wiping Out Predatory Animals.

During 1918 hunters of the United States department of agriculture killed 83 gray wolves in New Mexico, 34 mountain lions, 15 stock-destroying bears, 1,800 coyotes, and 350 bobcats, we are told. These animals were killed at a total expense of $24,800, and the saving effected by their destruction, on the basis commonly accepted by stockmen, amounts to $215,050 annually. Hunting during the spring period destroys many young, and thus prevents increase. Many coyotes not accounted for in the figures given were destroyed by poison. The killing of these animals marks a long stride in extermination of gray wolves and other predatory animals.

George Thompson, familiarly known to his shipmates as "Jake," idly turned over in his hands the letter the mail orderly had just given him. He scarcely glanced at it. It probably was from Sister Jo, anyway, as she was the only one who wrote to him lately. Jake was homesick. Just at present his ship was in drydock for repairs, and Jake had a 24-hour "liberty" hanging heavily upon his hands. There was no place to go, and nothing to do. Suddenly he remembered his letter. Without glancing at the address, he tore it open, but repented of his act the next moment, for he realized that the letter was not meant for him. As he looked at the address on the envelope his suspicions were confirmed. The letter belonged to "Jacob Thompson" and not "George Thompson." It was easy to see how the mail orderly might get the two confused, as the latter was known as "Jake." Shamelessly Jake read the short note written in a girlish hand. "Dearest Jake, I am so glad you are home. Please do come up and see me very soon, won't you, for I am anxious to know what my sailor looks like. With love, Mildred." In spite of himself Jake laughed. Jacob Thompson was surely not much to look at! He was a short insignificant looking man, with wisps of colorless hair. Amused and a little puzzled, Jake went in search of him. He found him busily writing, and the young fellow noticed what a perfect woman he was. "Say, Thompson," he began. "I got a letter of yours here. The mail orderly opened it. I'm very sorry."

A half hour later Thompson himself approached Jake. He was gruff as usual but plainly disturbed. Without a preliminary he said, "You know that letter you so thoughtfully opened for me?" Jake nodded, curious. "Well, the girl who wrote it is a friend of mine. She made this sweater and I found her name in it and wrote to her. I am a pretty decent writer and she thinks I am a good-looking young chap who is in love with her."

"That doesn't happen to be the case, for I'm no lady's man, so, my lad you take my place!"

"But why," asked Jake, "don't you go yourself?"

Thompson twisted his ungainly figure uncomfortably.

"Why—er—she won't be disappointed if you go, while one sight of me would knock her air castles to nothing. You'll go?"

After thinking it over, Jake decided to agree, on condition that he might tell her who he was.

Accordingly, at three o'clock Jake presented himself at the home of Miss Mildred Campbell. A little serving maid admitted him, plainly confused at the sight of the handsome sailor. With many bows she showed him into a cozy little room, where, at one end, an old-fashioned fireplace attracted his attention. He seated himself stily on a straight-backed chair, but he could not resist the temptation and settled himself comfortably on the wide couch, soft with many pillows. His boyish head buried in the pillows. It was thus Miss Mildred Campbell found him when she came downstairs. He did not hear her when she came and her girlish laugh aroused him. He sat bolt upright in an instant, a deep flush staining his cheeks. "Oh, I beg your pardon, I just couldn't help it; that couch looked so inviting!" Mildred soon put him at his ease and before long he was telling her numerous tales of his adventures in the navy. When he left at ten o'clock that evening he had promised to come again. Thompson was waiting for him when he got back to the ship and in his customary gruff way demanded to know what had taken place. Jake was only too willing to tell someone of the wonderful Miss Campbell. That young lady ready for the night was engaged in earnest conversation with her pet cat, "Fanny Face," and she confided to that feline that Jake Thompson was absolutely the nicest man she ever met!

The days flew by and the heart of Jake was in grave danger. As yet he had not told Mildred of his deceit and each day made it harder to do. Thompson paid no attention to him whatever except to listen silently to Jake's accounts of his visits to Mildred. At length one day Jake summoned courage and told her.

She did not speak until he had finished, and then she only said: "You must bring the real Jake to see me." Accordingly Thompson accompanied Jake on his next call. Mildred greeted them graciously and poor Jake was quite astonished when she said to Thompson, "You see, you were really more than kind to us, for if it weren't for you, Jake and I would never have met, and that would be terrible for we love each other, you know!" When they were alone for a moment, Jake asked her, "Why did you say that, Mildred?" The girl's eyes sparkled with happiness. "Well, it's so, isn't it?" she whispered. "Yes, of course it is, but how did you know?" From the depths of a dark blue shawl came the muffled words, "As for me, I knew when I saw you on the couch that day."

The Thompson-Campbell wedding was a gay affair, and more than one person wondered why out of that throng of good-looking men, the bridegroom should choose the short, insignificant-looking fellow for his tenn man.

Oregon Girl Teaches Agriculture in France.

Corvallis, Or., July 9.—Miss Pearl Leonard, of Portland, a graduate of the Oregon Agriculture college, is teaching agriculture in the University of Beaune, France. A Y. M. C. A. publication has the following to say about her:

"She was a canteen worker, and when professors were needed, the 'Y.' loaned her to the University, where more than 500 Yanks are registered. Her home is in Portland, Or., and the folks of the Rose City can feel mighty glad they have a girl who can carry on like she 'has been doing.'"

Miss Leonard for several years served as an assistant in O. A. C. offices. She withdrew to become secretary to the president of the normal school at Lewiston, Idaho.

Ridgefield Child Drowns.

Portland, July 8.—M. Bell, 12-year-old son of a Ridgefield, Wash., banker, was drowned in Lake River, near his home, yesterday, according to word received by the Portland police bureau. The lad was playing on a pile of railroad ties which were floating in the river, and fell into the water.

Friends of the family telephoned to Portland for help. Police were unable to assist them, because the accident occurred outside the state.

Wasco County Farmer Dies.

Astoria, Or., July 7.—Carl Mell, a farmer residing near The Dalles, died this morning at the home of his son, Fred Mell, of the ailments incident to advanced years. He had been visiting with his son about a month. He was a native of Germany, 78 years of age, and had resided in this country 52 years. The body will be sent to The Dalles for interment.
