

BETTER THAN COAT OF ARMS

Symbol of Pennsylvania Family Had Origin in Gratitude for Providential Help.

There is a quaint symbol engraved on the silver plate, the library book plates and the note paper of a family in Pennsylvania, but it isn't a crest or a coat of arms, by any means. In fact, it has no connection with the heraldry of the old world but is typically American.

The design is of a cat carrying a rabbit in its mouth, and there is an interesting legend to account for it. The first of the family to emigrate to this country was the father of ten children. He sailed the same year as Penn and died on the voyage, leaving his wife to land alone with her helpless flock. She had a grant of land, it is said, but no money, and so was obliged, like many of the first immigrants to our shores, to take refuge in a cave dug out of the side of a hill. The unfortunate family had a hard winter; provisions failed, and the widow was in despair as she saw her children grow pale and weak for want of food. The day came at last when there was not a grain of meal in the barrel. The poor woman spent many hours in prayer. When she arose, the story runs, she smiled, as her children put it, "as if she had seen an angel coming to help her." It was no angel, however, that the good woman beheld, but a cat with a freshly killed rabbit in its mouth. This rabbit provided a good meal, wherein, of course, the cat had its full share. And so the descendants of this woman, forming a prosperous and influential family, preserve to this day this old symbol of their early history.

"ANY FOOL CAN FIND FAULT"

Phrase is as True Today as When Great Man Said It Many Centuries Ago.

There is nothing however good but a person may find some fault in it if he is determined to do so. There is nothing perfect that is of man's making. There is nothing that man originates or performs but what contains more or less of his weakness. Worth, like water, must stay below the level of its source. It is quite natural that a person should dissent. The scientists dispute as much as the theologians. Every time one obtains a new standpoint he changes his opinion. Every time he meets a friend he finds that he differs.

So we must make up our minds to disagree, but this disagreement may be of advantage if we disagree in the right spirit. If we don't do that and our disagreement falls into ill will and animosity, then we become enemies of the truth and social pests besides. The person we earnestly and candidly disagree with may be right and ourselves wholly wrong. It would make us feel very absurd sometimes, in the midst of a violent controversy, to have a sudden light let in on the controversy and show our adversary entirely right. The safest thing, so far as one's conduct toward him is concerned, is to remember he may be right and treat him accordingly.—Ohio State Journal.

Odd Filipino Custom.

Of the inherited rover spirit of the wild people of Davao and their belief that the death of a member of the family is indicative of the will of Allah for them to change their homes, the bureau of forestry says:

"When someone dies in the house built on the land or homestead given to the head of the family, the entire family will move to some other place, and in most cases the house is either burned or torn down and the land on which it was built is abandoned for some years. A bird of the pigeon family, locally known as Alimukon, is the common god or fortune teller of the wild people of Davao. Unless this bird answers favorably to their supplications to go back to the old place, their old abode or abodes are either forever abandoned or left untouched for many years."

Chinaman Finds Joy in Work.

While nature has been kind to China in the gift of natural resources, the nature and quality of her people justify high expectations of their ability to utilize these resources for the benefit of all mankind. The Chinese have wrought out a standard of living which for efficiency in the realm of labor challenges the world. When the statement is made that a Chinese laborer can work for 12 hours of the 24 for 15 cents a day and board himself, the suggestion will naturally come to mind, but what of the quality of the work? The Chinaman has not yet raised the question of the number of hours which constitutes a day's work. He toils uncomplainingly from break of day until the evening star is clearly in sight, and this he will do every day of the week. Holidays are not frequent, and work is the source of his joy.

A Toothsome Thing.

"I see where a poet claims to have interpreted the soul of a mushroom."

"Ah!"

"In association with a thick, juicy steak, I can understand how a mushroom might lift a bard on the wings of song."

Made It Worse.

Mr. Plain—You are sure to admire him; he's a strikingly handsome man. The girl—I'm glad he is. I simply detect homely men. (Suddenly starting and blushing.)—Oh, I beg your pardon; I didn't mean to say that.

The World and Life.

The world is not a playground; it is a schoolroom. Life is not a holiday, it is an education.—Henry Drummond.

RED CROSS GIRLS FEED THOUSANDS OF DOUGHBOYS

Since the armistice, twenty-five canteens, operated by Red Cross Chapters in Idaho, Oregon, and Washington have dispensed 23,379 gallons of coffee, and 224,236 dozen sandwiches, to soldiers, sailors, and marines en route. The hospitality of these canteens was accepted nine hundred thousand times, often by men who would have gone hungry but for the Red Cross service thus rendered. Figures show that these men, through the courtesy of the Red Cross, drank 8,497 gallons of food drinks; used 6,663 bars of soap, and 37,713 paper towels; ate 57,491 chocolate bars, 16,629 pounds of candy, 14,754 dozen cookies, 74,913 dozen doughnuts, 9,488 dozen hot rolls; wrote 436,400 post cards furnished and stamped by the Red Cross; and to their own discomfort during a certain period, wore 12,250 influenza masks. All this, to say nothing of 22,956 full meals.

During this time 1847 sick men were aided by the canteen, seventy-nine of them being removed from trains as too sick to travel, and receiving immediate hospital attention.

Canteen work is nearly over, but the Red Cross still has vitally important work to do. Every membership in the Third Red Cross Roll Call will be a vote of confidence in the American Red Cross.
