

SAILORS WANTED.

The great want of Washington Territory is people, and those of a working character. Our country abounds with raw material that could be worked up into marketable products.

This element of population is especially requisite to the development of every maritime State. The superior seamanship of the Federal navy, in the late war, was mainly due to the culture of our sailors in the coastwise fisheries.

The names of Howland, Grinnell, Macomber and others illustrious in the history of American commerce, take their origin in the fisheries of New England.
