

THE WILLAMETTE FARMER.

This popular journal has lately removed its publication office from Salem to No. 5 Washington street, Portland, and will hereafter be published in this city.

It is published entirely in the interest of the producers of the Pacific Northwest, and especially those of the State of Oregon, whose confidence it possesses to a great degree, based on seven years' advocacy of their rights and devotion to their interests under the present management.

Its publishers propose to furnish in every issue a carefully compiled and reliable report of the markets at home and abroad. Those who have been its patrons know that it has always given them the most correct information to be had, and has shown in many years no favor to the schemes of capital and monopoly as opposed to their welfare.

The producers of the Northwest coast, and the vast interior drained by the waters of the Columbia, need a journal of influence and character that they can depend on for information as to markets, and that shall be in every sense their own, for exchange of information, discussion of all matters of importance to the people, able to criticize affairs of State as well as matters pertaining to agriculture, and not afraid to speak the truth at any time in their behalf; which shall also furnish them a complete summary of news and be a magazine of useful information and miscellaneous literature, as well as a friend to the domestic circle.

All this the Willamette Farmer has been, and it shall show as much progress and improvement as public patronage will permit. It takes the field at Portland with everything in its favor—the endorsement of the State Agricultural Society, and the State Grange, and the good will of thousands of subscribers.

It has recently been greatly enlarged—but it is the intention of the publishers, as soon as one thousand more subscribers are added to the list, that already numbers three thousand, to increase and enlarge so that the Farmer will supply in full all news of the day, State, territorial and foreign, and leave its patrons nothing to desire.

Price, $2.50 per annum in advance.

Shanahan's Art Gallery, on Morrison street, receives new attractions almost daily. Paintings, chromos and engravings of all kinds, as well as picture frames of various styles. Mr. Shanahan is also agent for the Mason & Hamlin organ, and Decker pianos.

J. F. D. Wrinkle & Co., corner First and Salmon streets, announce a great clearance sale of winter goods, and noticeable reductions are made in almost everything for the coming month. To persons in the country they will cheerfully send samples and price lists postage paid.

Whilst we by no means approve of the use of tobacco, we know that there are people who will smoke, no matter what arguments might be used against it. To such we would especially recommend John H. Woodrum's cigar manufactory. He employs none but white labor, and deserves special consideration on that account.

Instead of competing for the doubtful and disputed honors of State Fair premiums, Davidson Brothers, photographers of this city, were busily establishing a branch gallery at Walla Walla, W. T., which is now in successful operation.
