LOOKING FOR A GOOD TIME?

Before you decide he's the one:

- Get the boy's name.
- Chat him up. No need to interrogate the man you're bringing home, just find out a little bit about him: Where he works or goes to school, where he lives, what he likes and doesn't like...
- Be proud of your catch. Show him off. Introduce him to your friends, acquaintances, the bartender.
- Remember, alcohol and drugs cloud judgment. Alternate alcoholic drinks with water or soda. Think! Stay sober enough to stay alert and safe.
- Last dance? Last chance? Don't let desperation rule your night. If you leave with someone, make sure he knows you've told a friend that you are leaving with him.
- My place? Your place? Where does he live? If you go to his place, make sure you know how to get home and have money to get there. Go where you feel safer.
- Trust your instincts. If something feels even a little off with this guy, move on. It will happen again—tonight or another night. If you feel uncomfortable later on, leave. If he's at your place and won't leave, go to a neighbor's or a pay phone and call the police.
- Paying for it? Consider looking for someone at a bar (ask the bartender about him) or through an ad, rather than on the street. Either way, have a drink or coffee at a public place first. Check him out! Make sure the terms are clear. Picking up hustlers is risky. Be careful.
- Get help if you need it. If there is an immediate threat, or if you are hurt, call 9-1-1. The Lesbian Community Project's Anti-Violence Line, 1-800-796-1703, serves both men and women.
