1. That all people are by nature equally free and independent, and have certain inherent rights, of which, when they enter into a state of society, they cannot, by any compact, deprive or destroy their posterity; namely, the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the means of acquiring and possessing property, and pursuing and obtaining happiness and safety. 2. That all power is vested in, and consequently derived from, the people. That magistrates are their trustees and servants, and at all times amenable to them. 3. That government is, in its original form, a compact of all the various modes and forms of government, which are established, for the purpose of producing the greatest degree of happiness and safety, and in no case shall the government be found inadequate or contrary to these purposes. 4. That the legislative, executive, and judiciary, powers, shall be separate and distinct, and shall be exercised by separate bodies, elected by different parts of the people, in an assembly, singly. 5. That the representatives of the people, in assembly, shall have the right to speak freely on their behalf, and to publish their opinions, and to be protected in their freedom of speech, and to be exempt from arrest, and to be exempt from military or naval service, and to be exempt from any other public duty, and to be exempt from any other public duty, and to be exempt from any other public duty. 6. That the representatives of the people, in assembly, shall have the right to demand the production of any papers, and to call for evidence in their own favor, and to be exempt from any other public duty, and to be exempt from any other public duty. 7. That the representatives of the people, in assembly, shall have the right to demand the production of any papers, and to call for evidence in their own favor, and to be exempt from any other public duty, and to be exempt from any other public duty. 8. That the representatives of the people, in assembly, shall have the right to demand the production of any papers, and to call for evidence in their own favor, and to be exempt from any other public duty, and to be exempt from any other public duty. 9. That the representatives of the people, in assembly, shall have the right to demand the production of any papers, and to call for evidence in their own favor, and to be exempt from any other public duty, and to be exempt from any other public duty.
