

THE ALYSON ALMANAC

PRESENTS in gay and lesbian history

March 4, 1973: Betty Friedan, founder of the National Organization for Women, charges that lesbians had plotted to seduce her, and were trying to take over NOW. But her colleagues refused to follow her. Robin Morgan urged the public to dismiss Friedan's "pathetic demands that we all now go backward."

Springtime greetings to Julius Caesar

July 12(?), 100 B.C.-Mar. 15, 44 B.C.) It is Caesar's relationship with Cleopatra that we remember, but much of his kingdom was inherited from his lover King Nicomedes of Bithynia. They met as young men during war, and their liaison scandalized associates. Caesar later had three wives and several male lovers, earning the epithet "Husband to every woman and wife to every man." Then came those cursed Ides of March.

Standing Tall

The Times of Harvey Milk, a documentary about the openly gay San Francisco City Supervisor who was assassinated by a fellow Supervisor in 1978, picked up an Academy Award on March 25, 1985. It was the first gay-themed film to receive an Oscar.

HUNGARY?!?

Hungary isn't on anybody's list of fun places to be openly gay, but in a surprise ruling, the country's Constitutional Court declared on March 8, 1995, that common-law gay marriages should be accorded the same rights as heterosexual unions. It ordered parliament to make legal provisions within the year.
