AZERBAIJAN

The former Soviet republic of Azerbaijan passed legislation in late May legalizing gay male sex. It will take effect in September. (Lesbian sex was never banned.)

Male anal sex was prohibited by Criminal Code Article 113, which was left over from Soviet times. A new statute bans only forced sex.

Along with other changes to its criminal code, Azerbaijan legalized gay sex in hopes of being accepted into the 41-nation Council of Europe, which requires that member nations not prohibit homosexuality.

In the whole of Europe, only the former Soviet republic of Armenia, Serbia and Chechnya still ban gay sex outright, according to the International Lesbian & Gay Association.

The Council of Europe was founded following World War II and works to strengthen democracy, human rights and the rule of law in member states. For more information, visit www.coe.fr.

FRANCE

Youth and Sports Minister Marie-George Buffet opened Paris' first gay youth center June 26.

The center hopes to create a friendly atmosphere that will allow sexual minority youths "to break the isolation they may be facing," a spokesman said.

"We provide them with a place for discussion, free speech and exchange of experiences during our various leisure activities," he added.

Funding came, in part, from the European Union, France's Youth and Sports Ministry and the Ile-de-France Regional Council.

The opening ceremonies were attended by several politicians.

INTERNATIONAL

The 22nd European regional conference of the International Lesbian & Gay Association will be in Romania this year, from Oct. 4 to 8.

"[The conference] will add needed moral support to the Romanian lesbian and gay community that is still facing not only discrimination by law but also homophobia and sometimes institutionalized propaganda," said organizer Adrian Coman of the Bucharest gay group Accept.

The conference will coincide with the presidential campaign and with Romania's ongoing efforts to bring its human rights standards in line with requirements for membership in the European Union.

On June 28, the lower house of parliament, the Chamber of Deputies, voted to legalize gay sex except when "performed in public." The measure has not been considered by the Senate.

A whopping 750,000 people attended Toronto's 20th pride parade June 25, according to the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. Meanwhile, 50 protesters staged a Straight Pride Stride event in nearby Queen's Park.

About 100,000 people crowded central London on July 1 for the Mardi Gras 2000 gay and lesbian pride march. A post-parade festival and concert in Finsbury Park featured Boy George and Culture Club, Bananarama, Dana International and Australian pop diva Kylie Minogue.

Between 100 and 350 people staged Guatemala's first gay pride march June 25.

Media reports and organizers disagreed on the attendance figure. According to Reuters, the marchers visited four locations in Guatemala City where transvestites were killed last year in apparent hate crimes.

In Spain, about 50,000 people turned out for Madrid's pride parade July 1, and almost 10,000 marched in Barcelona.

The World Pride Rome 2000 celebration that horrified the Vatican and right-wing Italian politicians ended with a huge parade to the Colosseum on July 8.

Police estimated a turnout of 70,000, state television said 200,000, and organizers said 400,000.

According to one reporter, "The crowd included young couples with baby strollers, bare-breasted
