COFFEE TALK

Bad Kitty java isn't your average cup of joe

Fans and customers of the former shiny black box trailer that was home to Bad Kitty Koffee have good reason to celebrate. Bad Kitty Koffee is back—and you won't have to stand in the rain anymore while waiting to be served.

Kevin McGorty, aka Twiggy, is now serving coffee and espresso drinks from his new storefront location at 724 S.W. Washington St. Complete with modern amenities such as indoor seating, the feral feline also offers homemade pastries, sandwiches, salads, soups and shakes. Take a note of this, hungry munchers: McGorty makes all the food himself, in-house and fresh.

Here at Just Out we're also hoping this location will become our newest downtown distribution point. Can we, Kevin, huh, can we?

For his grand opening McGorty is holding the first of many planned events to benefit the Oregon Humane Society. Stop by and find out how you can win a beautifully crafted, unique, too-cool-for-words, big ole snowboard—to be awarded at the beginning of the next ski season. Donations will support causes promoting animal, civil and human rights. In addition, all Bad Kitty Koffee beans come from Mexico and meet fair trade requirements.

So, say the soup at Bad Kitty is so good that you must have a quart or two to go. Soup to die for, right, and you need it at home. What's the best way to store your precious soup? Tupperware. Yup, Tupperware. It's not for housewives anymore.

The reigning queen of the lavender Tupperware crowd is one Miss Kimberlee Van Patten, who in her spare time puts together a little family picnic each summer known as Peacock in the Park. (OK, she may have some help with doing that.)

When queried as to why on earth anyone would want to sell Tupperware she replied, with pained indignation, "Hey, it's easy, it's fun, you go to parties, talk to friends, eat food and make money—why not do it?" Why not indeed.

If the Tupperware that you inherited from your grandmother is getting a little ragged around the edges, call Kimberlee and she'll throw a party for you. She can be reached at

From plastic containers we move on to the wondrous possibilities awaiting you in multi-functional modular furniture—unique and original concept furniture that can be custom designed using glass, wood, metal, marble, travertine, granite, soapstone or virtually any other material you might desire. Where will you find these classy and upscale products? At Portland's newest gallery and custom design studio, Paolo in the Pearl, where you'll find "solutions for urban living."

Noted designer and choreographer Paul Scardina celebrated First Thursday in March with the grand opening of his new 1,500-square-foot space. With the works of Portland artists featured throughout, the area has a distinctly inviting and friendly feel.

The contemporary furnishings are accented with style and charm by the skilled placement of selected Asian antiques, providing a blending of warmth and function. The modular pieces are all Scardina originals and are designed to meet the needs of a new type of city resident.
