

HOW FAR OUT OF THE CLOSET ARE YOU?

Since Stonewall gay men have increasingly chosen to live their lives openly even though they may face disapproval and discrimination from others. Yet even men who at first appear to have completely slammed the closet door behind them can harbor concern that a particular relative or perhaps a "boss" might discover their actual identity. Others may only be out to a few straight people.

The decision of how out to be is very personal and there is no rule that works for everyone. Sadly some gay men will live their entire lives under the tyranny of fear and shame. Even the most out may have skeletons still lurking in the closet they thought they had left behind. These skeletons prevent them from being whole in spite of being openly gay.

Jesus taught that the pure in heart are blessed but how can anyone be truly pure in heart and hide the essential truth of his being? Such secrecy carries with it a heavy burden of despair that can only be relieved by living authentically, no matter what the consequences. Every gay man faces the lifelong task of growing in wholeness. Created gay by a loving God, we are a gift to ourselves and to the world when we walk the path of authenticity.
