Are there things my best friend should know before signing up for a gay porno?

DEAR MS. BEHAVIOR:

My best friend, Rod, is about to sign up to be in a gay porn movie. Are there things he should know before signing on the dotted line? I told him to think about it, but he is too impulsive and wants the money. Some of his friends have done it, so it seems harmless and fun to him. It doesn't seem harmless to me. I don't want to see him rush into something that he might later regret. What do you think?

—Rod's Conservative Friend

Ms. Behavior
BY MERYL COHN

DEAR ROD'S CONSERVATIVE FRIEND:

There are a lot of things Rod should know before agreeing to be in a porn video, but it's unlikely that he'll hear them because at the moment he undoubtedly thinks that fucking and sucking on celluloid (or the digital equivalent) is extremely glamorous, especially since his friends have done it and their penises probably look huge on a large screen.

There aren't any legal protections for people who act in low-budget porno videos. Rod should read his contract, which will undoubtedly be designed to protect only the producer and his interests. If Rod has any questions, he should bring them to a lawyer so that he knows what rights he's giving away.

Unfortunately, the issues that worry you (and Ms. Behavior) probably don't actually concern Rod. For example, Rod probably isn't thinking about how a little on-film fisting might affect a future career in politics, media or education. He probably figures that very few people will see his video. This isn't true; in fact, Rod should assume that the video will potentially be available to everyone he knows and will ever know in the future. Porn videos have no expiration date and never really go out of circulation. If Rod or anyone else in the video ever becomes famous for any reason at all, the video could resurface at any point in the future. And from now on, anytime a date says, "I can't figure out how I know you," Rod will wonder if it's from Starbucks or from the golden shower scene in the movie.

DEAR MS. BEHAVIOR:

I work in a laid-back environment with a mixture of straight and gay people. I'm out at work, and no one cares.

Mindy, one of the hyper PR lesbians here, walks in every morning with her big bucket of coffee and her doughnuts and says as she passes my desk, "Good morning, Faggy!" You don't see me responding rudely, even though it would be easy, because she has one of those weird lesbian hairstyles—long in the back and short on top—and she has no fashion sense. She actually wears big old rainbow shawls and Timberland boots to work.

Maybe she thinks that calling me "Faggy" is cute and just teeming with camaraderie. But here's a news flash: Homosexual professional gentlemen do not like being called FAGGY! I want to tell her as much, but I'm wondering how to say. Can you write me a script?

—Bill

DEAR BILL:

You're probably tempted to start with something like: "Listen up, you annoying, carpet-munching, mullet-wearing lezzie. Why don't you go back to the woods and chant in a circle with your sisters and spare the rest of us."

But really, Bill, that would not be very loving or compassionate, and it reeks of a certain kind of internalized homophobia, the same way it does when she calls you "Faggy." So, you could try something gentle like: "Mindy, I appreciate your trying to establish that we're on the same team, but couldn't we just do that with a covert glance or a secret curtsy? Or might we flash our pinkie rings at each other, like queers did in the 1950s, back in the days when sexual orientation was private?"

Of course, Mindy is probably trying to be out and proud and she might not have any sense of humor at all, so your playful suggestion of something clandestine will probably stimulate her political feelings regarding being closeted and cause her a big, hairy crisis. So why not stick to something safer like, "Mindy, it bugs me when you call me 'Faggy,' so please don't do it."

If it turns out that Mindy really needs a sense of camaraderie based on your shared queerness, maybe you can offer to let her call you a private nickname that is based on a secret language between the two of you. So when she passes by with her doughnuts and says, "Good morning, Monkey," only you and she will know that "Good morning" really means "You're very hunky," and "Monkey" means "Sodomizer."
