Have Gay Noons at Zaytoon

Zaytoon—once just a classy, chic place to nibble on pita and sip martinis—is now open weekdays from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. for brunch.

The tiny Euro-style menu with choice breakfast bevies, the jazz music and the open-air seating are a breath of fresh air. The orange pistachio pancakes are terrific, perhaps the best hot cakes in the city. The use of zaatar, a type of Mediterranean oregano pesto, in the eggs makes the frittatas and scrambles sumptuously savory. The pistachio date roll "smothered" in a sweet blood orange glaze is like the bastard child of the cinnamon roll and baklava. Zaytoon has even added a bloody mary bar tucked under the stairs, where you are left to concoct your own potent potable from a choice of divine vodkas. A blood orange mimosa is delightful and cheap enough ($5) to get two, if need be.

The wonderfully muted olive colors, burgundy bar, mustard yellow backgrounds and architectural metalwork glow in the sunshine warming the large restaurant. You'll find it hard to believe it's the same swanky, swooning place come nightfall.

Lesbian owner Aysha Ghazoul continues to grow the restaurant—now open late with live jazz—into a respected neighborhood establishment of cultural diversity. From late-night specials to somewhat early-bird hour, Zaytoon is a surefire bet. All in all, the brunch is the best thing yet to happen to Zaytoon, which has brought everything from movie nights to fashion shows to the denizens of Alberta. The brunch fare is still in its infancy stage, so go now before the folks at Tin Shed hear 'bout it and start lining up.
