"Untitled" by J.T. Ollett

I selected this entry in the "People" category because it effectively captured a candid moment that took place, I assume, on some form of public transportation. As any bus or train rider already knows, mass transit requires people to strike a delicate balance: You need to tolerate close contact with total strangers while avoiding eye contact, both illustrated beautifully here. Also, the wet weather reminds me of home. (As Garbage once sang, I'm only happy when it rains.)

"Emma" by KJ Tate

I love this image. The color and composition, whether accidental or contrived, are quite stunning. As anyone who loves Great Danes can tell you, they are full of personality and about as curious as any cat. If you try to get dressed in the morning, their face is in your shoe, inside your shirt, sniffing and taking your socks, on and on. I wonder how difficult it was to arrange the roses with the dog in the room. This picture of Emma reminds me of both of the Greats I have owned.
