"On days when I feel everlasting" are the first words in the poem "Anthem II" written by Kathleen Saadat. Those words are part of the legacy that Kathleen's vision and life's work are creating. Kathleen is a passionate advocate who believes that persistent love, not anger or hatred, moves us closer to achieving human rights for all human beings.

Kathleen is a woman who was not afraid to sit in the front of bus when it was not acceptable for African Americans to do so. A woman who pushed socio-economic and intellectual boundaries by attending Reed College as an "older" African-American lesbian at age 30. A woman that participated in the film, Ballot Measure 9, to give voice to Oregon's early divisive politics on GLBT issues. A woman who marched in Oregon's first Pride parade when it was not safe to do so. A woman who believes that all humans are multidimensional and that all of those dimensions should be honored.

Kathleen is connected at the heart to those around her. Growing up, she was comforted sharing meals with her loving family and engaging in frank yet respectful conversation. Those early memories have given her a profound desire to create community and surround herself with loving people, whether nurturing and being nurtured by other writers in 29th Street Writers, or interacting with her compassionate and committed co-workers at Cascade AIDS Project as the Director of Diversity and Human Resources.

We must renew our commitment and not become complacent as GLBT people are more mainstreamed. We still have a lot of human rights to claim. Take action, take risks, and don't be afraid to make and admit mistakes. These are the words of a very wise woman.
