"BASKET CASE"

I love that the composition is thoughtful, yet the image is totally wacky ... and relatable, to me anyway.

LAURA ATKINSON,
CREATIVE DIRECTOR

ROBERT RICHTER

I'm interested in any image with eeriness as a central theme, and although I'm unsure if this is what the photographer was going for, this beauty lies in my beholden eye. It feels like a haunting has taken place in this corridor – or even scarier, that the grim reaper has been drawn from the shadows for an afternoon serenade. Beware of Pike Place Market nigh the House of Silver and Gold!

That's me in my dream – on a mission in Tokyo, Japan.

CLIFF LI, PRODUCTION ASSISTANT

From all the pictures submitted for the contest, what was it about this one that stood out to me? The photo speaks to me of days gone by. It speaks of the rural life of my childhood memories, of being the daughter and granddaughter of loggers. It speaks of country life and community, of lumber, of mountains and fields. It speaks of the logging camps of those summers. It makes me remember – and long for – yesterday.

"MARMOR ROAD," BY LYNNE HANSON

If every picture tells a story, this one plays like a narrative collage: The disheveled tarp, the green lattice fence and battered blue-and-white barricade, that Suzuki bike, the international flavors of Bin Laden's Café – hello, 'Tali-ban beer.' And then there's "CIA Duty-Free Torture."

The exposure, confrontational framing and visible flashbulb lighting only amplify the overall unease of the photograph. It's political, cultural and personal. The image feels like a crime scene, an indictment, a smuggled moment – cluttered with evidence. The eye doesn't know quite where to go. Wherever it lands, I want to know more.
