The Faces of History

Historical LGBTQ figures on exhibit at Disjecta

BY WAYNE BUND

For Pride Month, Disjecta is going gay.

The arts center located in the Kenton neighborhood is hosting the exhibit Queer Academy: Part One—The Men, a collection of two-dimensional, mixed-media portraits by Dal Ray Williams. The exhibit aims to represent important figures in history, bringing them back to the spotlight.

"An academy is an institution of higher learning, research or honorary membership," Williams says of the show's title. "Mine is an honorary institution of queer history."

Presented in the Flex Space, Disjecta Contemporary Arts Center's side gallery, Queer Academy is a show dedicated to memorializing LGBTQ history. Each portrait is a hybrid of painting and collage, combining acrylic, fabric and paper on canvas. Socrates, Walt Whitman, Billy Bean and Pyotr Tchaikovsky are a few of the men depicted. The exhibit runs June 4-26.

Williams drew his inspiration from his frustration about the recent surge in bullying and suicide in the LGBTQ youth population. "About eight months ago, I woke up for the third day and read about the bullying and suicide of LGBTQ kids and I said to myself that I had to do something," he explains. "What could I do that would touch these kids and make them feel okay about who they are?"

The aim of Queer Academy is to show a cross-section of cultural icons from varying fields such as sports, academics and politics, and present them in one cohesive community. "Many of these youths can't see a positive future for themselves, but we do," says Williams.

"If you read about [Harvey Milk], his life was somewhat of a patchwork. He was in the military, an accountant, then a hippie, then a shop owner and then an elected official. There is patchwork to symbolize this."

-DAL RAY WILLIAMS

No stranger to the Northwest, nor Disjecta, Williams has lived in Portland for 14 years, working in apparel design. He first became involved with Disjecta as an artist renting out a studio. Williams helped come up with the idea for the Vestibule, an alternative gallery space at Disjecta, and recently joined the board there.
