Jonathan Rhys Meyers as Brian Slade in Todd Haynes' iconic film, Velvet Goldmine

Todd Couple

Filmmaker Haynes hosts a doubleheader of inspiration

Fans of acclaimed filmmaker Todd Haynes are in for a reel treat. The man behind androgynous glam classic Velvet Goldmine, '50s melodrama homage Far From Heaven and, most recently, Emmy-winning HBO miniseries Mildred Pierce will visit the Hollywood Theatre for an evening behind the screens.

In a doubleheader of moviemaking presented on (whoa) 35mm, the Portland-based auteur—who rose to cult fame with his 1988 Barbie doll-acted short film on the life of Karen Carpenter—revisits two titles that have influenced his signature world view: 1970 gangster flick Performance and 1958 Hitchcock entry Vertigo.

In the former, none other than Mick Jagger plays an (again, whoa) all-but-retired rocker who opens his bohemian flat to an East London thug out to lie low after a recent hit. It's a stylized time capsule of cockney hoodlums, free love, identity and rock 'n' roll, in which Jagger's character proclaims, "The only performance that makes it, that really makes it ... is the one that achieves madness."

Cue the evening's next film, the masterpiece of obsession and anxiety starring James Stewart and Kim Novak. Like Performance, Vertigo paws at identity and (in)sanity. Together, they offer a glimpse into the screen visions of a New Queer Cinema pioneer; if the first is an obvious precursor to the sex-fueled neo-psychedelia of Haynes' Goldmine, the second is the blueprint (black-and-white print?) for his painstaking tributes to Old Hollywood.

Haynes will introduce each film, in a night that marks the start of En Route, the Hollywood Theatre's new series spotlighting artists and their inspirations—and perhaps yours.

Sat., Oct. 15, 7 p.m. (Vertigo), 9:45 p.m. (Performance); Hollywood Theatre, 4122 NE Sandy Blvd.; $10 for both films; hollywoodtheatre.org.
