Unsung Heroes

There are, we all know, a number of "unsung heroes" in every school. Among them are the second team in athletics, debate and typing, those who afford the competition before the first team is definitely picked.

The harder the second teams work, the harder the first team has to work to keep ahead. The team that plays the best man or gives the best coloratura display, or writes the highest number of words a minute in a contest wins only because each member had to work more, more, more to keep ahead of his rivals.

These are not the only people in a school who get very little credit for what they do. Our play director, and our shorthand and typing and debate coaches work hard and we write perhaps more about the outcome of a contest than the contestants themselves. If the particular team wins, it is its members that receive the applause but on the other hand, if the team loses the blame is often placed with the teacher, coach or director.

Let us be more careful upon whom we place the blame for the loss of a contest and be more lenient in giving our praise so that all who work may profit by it in one way or another.

Attention!

What would be more humiliating than calling upon a friend who devoted his attention to reading a book or writing a letter while your were attempting to carry on a conversation? Would he be very likely to call upon him again? But after all...
