

After Graduation -- What?

After graduation — what? Are you one who has worked all through high school or have you had things come easy? Maybe you just didn't try. But after graduation, then what?

During the years in high school were you an asset to the school? Did you help in school functions or were you one of those that "drug his feet," or "just didn't feel like it?"

This may be all fine and dandy while you were in high school, but if you didn't work hard, if you didn't participate, what is going to happen after high school?

Will you be one of those many graduates who drift from job to job because "the boss just didn't like you," or "the work was too hard" or will you be one who accepts his job as a challenge and works toward a goal. Will you be a freshman drop-out at college because "the prof had it in for you" or because "the card game down at the student union was too much fun?"

If you choose marriage, will your young marriage become a statistic, go on the rocks because "she didn't understand me," or "he expected too much"? Marriage requires planning because, in spite of the casual regard for marriage young people of today seem to have, marriage is a serious business, a life-time deal.

Regardless of what you do after graduation, marriage, career, or college, put a goal that will take a struggle to reach and will be worth reaching. When you are out on your own, no one is going to hold your hand or live your life for you, so now is the time to make the decision to stand on your own two feet and live a happy, useful life. S.O.

Television In Action

It was a bright, crisp day when the tragic incident occurred. We were driving through the Wide Country, when we heard a shot and saw Gun Smoke. Like a streak of lightning we saw the Rifleman emerge from a camouflage of brush.

I immediately put down my last edition of David Brinkley's Journal, which I had been reading when I was so rudely interrupted. The first thought that came to my mind was, "Car 34 where are you?"

As we come closer to the scene of the crime, which took place on Route 66, just south of Naked City, we discovered that the Virginian had been shot in the back. Noticing that he was still alive, we rushed him to the hospital, where he was left in the good care of Ben Casey and Doctor Kildare.

We then called his lawyer, Sam Benedict, who was staying with The Jetsons, and informed him of the shooting.

After reaching the hospital and talking to the Virginian, Mr. Benedict gave us the whole story. He said that the Virginian lived at 77 Sunset Strip with Joey Bishop. They got along just fine until the night of Friday the 13th, when they were watching Twilight Zone, which was on at the same time as Rawhide. He said they began to quarrel about which television show they would watch. Suddenly, Joey jumped up and shouted, "I'm the head of this Empire, and besides, Father Knows Best." So the Virginian yelled back, "Last night during the Eleventh Hour, you said I could watch Rawhide, but I can't prove it because I don't have any Defenders."

They went outside and took cover to settle it out. As the Virginian was running for cover, Joey shot him in the back with his rifle.

So now Mr. Benedict is on his way to 87th Precinct to speak

ATTENTION

Attention all would-be short story writers and poets! Your contributions are wanted for the annual Literary Review, a collection of short stories, poems, and pictures. This production is published by the members of Quill and Scroll.

If you have any works of art which you think would be acceptable, give them to Mrs. MacAlaster. All entries will be judged by the English teachers and the Quill and Scroll members.

Seniors To Visit The Deans' Offices

"Mr. Magnanimous, please send Harlow to the dean's office right away." This is a common request that echoes through the halls of Ashland High these days. One by one each senior makes his way to the dean's office for an evaluation of his accomplishments, potentials, and abilities. It is with some trepidation and curiosity that each senior answers that call. The individual senior is given a thorough account of his scholastic achievements, based upon his grades, and the tests that he has taken. The senior is also given an evaluation of his social about school which includes his conduct, his manner, and his attitude towards others.

The deans also discuss with the student his capabilities and talents in an attempt to help him choose his life's work. Suggestions are given for ways of achieving the student's aim in life.

Advice—Seniors, don't approach this conference with anxiety. Go into it with the idea of learning all you can.

to his new client, Joey Bishop. He, too, prefers Twilight Zone to Rawhide.
