PRACTICAL HELP.

Given the desire for satisfaction and willingness to produce, then, do we face the need of practical methods of teaching the very poor how to produce. What a man can consume, is generally speaking, what he can produce; increase his productivity, and you will increase his control over the consumption of the articles which satisfy his wants. But before making specific suggestions for augmenting productive power, it is necessary to refer to a way by which the very poor must be tested. They are usually herded in crowded city districts. First of all, those who are willing must be separated from those who are unwilling to work. The criminal, the lazy, the intemperate, the degenerate stand in an entirely different class from the unfortunate, the ignorant, the unskilled and the temporarily disabled. The problem of treatment of the former is not an economic, but a political and social one; while the case of the latter is primarily an economic one. Keeping this separation in mind, what practical test can be offered to distinguish between the two kinds? The answer is, the offer of work. But, says an objector, shall the municipality assume the whole labor bill of the unemployed? Not necessarily. In the first place, municipal employment agencies are means yet untried to any extent; the means of connecting the special demand with the special labor is capable of very great development. More than that, the underlying theory of the antiquated poorhouse system is capable of great variation. Indeed, the Salvation Army has already shown the way. For instance, farm labor is exceedingly scarce; and immense tracts of land are almost untouched. Let the municipality join with organized charity associations, and enable all those who are willing to be set to work upon the land. In case of ignorance an intermediate period may be spent under skilled agricultural instructors, until the laborer can be sent to his own plot, where in due time he should be able to pay for his home while living a life of independence and honest toil.
