Wolf

The crux of the debate centers around disagreement about the behavior of wolves in the presence of humans in general and in this scenario, and what the photographic evidence shows about the angle of the shot, versus Scott's statement about the angle, and OSP's investigation and interpretation.

The letter stated, "...We are not questioning that the hunter may have felt fearful. We are, however, questioning his story that he shot the wolf while it was running toward him. We are questioning OSP's official report of the incident, which corroborated the hunter's story, even though the evidence suggested otherwise. And we are questioning the Union County District Attorney's decision not to prosecute..."

Generally, the accepted thinking is that wolves (and bears and cougars, etc.) avoid humans, and can easily be scared off, however, for example, according to the Alaska Dispatch News, the body of a 32-year-old special education teacher, Candice Bernet, was found on March 8, 2010, two miles outside the village of Chignik Lake, which is 474 miles southwest of Anchorage.

Bernet was chased down by at least two wolves and killed, as she was jogging along a road, according to the Alaska Department of Fish and Game.

According to the article, by Dan Joling, biologists cited aggression as the reason for the attack, and there was no evidence that Bernet had been carrying food, that the wolves were acting defensively, that there was a kill site, that the wolves had become habituated to humans, or that they had rabies.

The letter to the Governor includes co-sponsors Paula Hood, Co-Director, Blue Mountain Biodiversity Project; Nick Cady, Legal Director, Cascadia Wildlands; Amaroq Weiss, West Coast Wolf Advocate, Center for Biological Diversity; Quinn Read, Northwest Representative, Defenders of Wildlife; Veronica Warnock, Conservation Director, Greater Hells Canyon Council; Scott Beckstead, Oregon State Director, Humane Society of the United States; Timothy J. Coleman, Executive Director, Kettle Range Conservation Group; Wally Sykes, Founder, Northeast Oregon Ecosystems; Paige Spence, OCN Director, Oregon League of Conservation Voters; Brooks Fahy, Executive Director, Predator Defense; Camilla Fox, Founder and Executive Director, Project Coyote; Rhett Lawrence, Conservation Director, Oregon Chapter, Sierra Club; John Mellgren, Staff Attorney, Western Environmental Law Center; Josh Osher, Public Policy Consultant, Western Watersheds Project; and Bethany Cotton, Wildlife Program Director, WildEarth Guardians.
