Monahan

She explained they try to connect people with resources that can help them to learn healthier coping skills and things for them to do that are healthy outlets.

Monahan has two case-loads; one is sex offender specific and the other has substance abuse cases.

She said, "We all have areas where we're somewhat specialized, but working in a small office in a rural area gives us the opportunity to really super-serve everything."

"Where you kind of get pigeonholed in bigger agencies. Multnomah County has a sex offender supervision unit and some of their sex offender supervision is specific to psychopaths and some of it is specific to your misdemeanor sex offenders that get put on supervision.

"So, they really pigeon-hole you down so you don't get the opportunity to learn about dealing with mental health cases or dealing with cases where people are chemically dependent or dealing with people who, maybe they just grew up in an environment that was so antisocial that they didn't know how to talk about what was bothering them."

Monahan explained that they send people to New Directions for alcohol and drug treatment and Total Health for mental health treatment.

The people are responsible for making their appointments to help them be responsible and accountable, but also teach them about balancing work and home.

She explained they talk about setting aside time during the weekend to figure out meals for the week, or go grocery shopping on those days so they are not overwhelmed.

"It's a lot of lack of life skills that bring people into supervision," said Monahan. "Like healthy coping mechanisms, knowing to walk away from an argument instead of really engaging that argument, and recognizing a situation as bad, recognizing people are bad for you, and I get to tell my clients a lot of things they don't like to hear, like 'No, it's not healthy.' And they don't want to hear that because they like their world and change is scary for most people. But with our clients, they are comfortable in their chaos and normalcy can be a little bit daunting."

Sam Bass

She said, "But Sam was the outgoing person, he always wanted to go out and talk and be right in the middle of people. And it became known as Sam's Display, which was okay with me. But with him gone now, it's time to pass it on to somebody else."

The walkthrough legacy will be continued by Bill Lee on Birch Street in 2018 and they will have a picture of Sam Bass that is currently at the Bass Walkthrough, to continue it as Sam's.

Bass explained she will continue to put some decorations on the front of her house, but it will be the last year she holds the walkthrough.

Bass explained that her niece, Kelly Aldrich, and her daughter, Katie Rae, have set up a Winter Wonderland in North Powder with Bass's indoor village and indoor animated decorations. It is open Friday and Saturday nights at the Café of the old Powder Club area.

Her niece will also be taking some of the characters, such as Lilo and Stitch and Monsters Inc., and will be set up at North Powder. It won't be a walkthrough, but it will be visible for people to see.

Bass said with a large plastic Winnie the Poo and four plastic lawn characters started the tradition 33 years ago.

Bass explained that people were getting out of their cars to look at the decorations.

The following year, they added the Grinch and Max the dog on plywood and even more people started looking out. Each year, it continued to grow into the festive light and character walkthrough it is today with moving characters and music.

They begin setting up the walkthrough the weekend after Halloween, they turn it on Thanksgiving night, and leave it up until New Year's Eve.

She turns on the walkthrough when it starts getting dark and she turns it off around 9:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. for the first two weeks then she leaves it on later.

"We appreciate the people who came by and made it such a success," said Bass. "And we definitely hope we instilled the Christmas spirit in them and we hope they patronize Bill, and Kelly and Katie."
