

SUBTLE SATIRE

Here you see in print the first attempt of "Subtle Satire," which is "doit" dished up in oh! such a subtle manner.

Here's a hot one, kids — it seems that a dean of men in a small co-ed school in the east was telling the boys the amounts of the fines that would be imposed on them for visiting the girls "dorm" after hours. When he had finished stating the amounts of the fines which went something like this: fifty cents for the first offense, a dollar for the second, and so on, a bright freshman in the rear shouted: "How much for a season ticket!" (Don't blame me, that's not original.)

Now for some bits of this and that—Red Eadon standing outside in the hall every day during sixth period study waiting for a blond (incidentally the blonde's name is Hazel).—Jean Kylo is heart broken over one Don Redhead; probably just a rumor, or is it?—Leo Kelt and Miss Gary getting kicked out of sixth period biology class.—Lois Young airing her wardrobe of letterman's sweaters.—Keep up the good work Vincent, maybe you can get her in the rebound or have you given up already?—Gloria Smith and Van Laningham not wearing O. C. sweaters any more. What's the matter girls?—Verle Day and a new Portland heart-throb (anyone know his name?)—Does Vi Bickel sleep in that raincoat?—If you wish to give to a good cause, the boys are taking up a collection so that Smokey can get a date with Hedy Lamour. That's what I like about Anderson, so sky, retiring, and modest.—Gayle Zanlker is interested in finding out who Harold Snider's recent heart interest is.—The Trysting Place, Pat Goodrich's locker. (What are you waiting for Evan, a street car?)—A snappy bit of repartee between Mary McLean and Miss Moffatt at a recent pep assembly — someone pasting Willkie stickers around school.—(Which didn't stay on very long.)—The great dictator, Eagle Eye Butler, censoring this column to pieces.—If you have any material that I can get by the censor, please hand it in to the Feature Editor of the Amp. And remember, if there is anything worse than being talked about, it's not being talked about.

Mr. Howard to Conference

from the Mormon Temple. Reports, round table discussions, special committee meetings and reports, laying of plans for the year's work and a banquet will be the business of the two-day convention. A special organ concert will be given in the Mormon Temple for the delegates.

Attending the conference will be officers of the Northern Baptist convention, presidents and officers of state association from 11 states.

Mr. Howard will return Monday morning and arrive home about 11:30 a. m.

Question: Why is Bill Buckles' neck like a typewriter?

Answer: Because it is Underwood.
