Our Air Raid

West Linn yesterday had a perfect example of what not to do in an air raid when a preliminary test of a new raid warning siren was made. Instead of remaining quietly in class, students and teachers ran hysterically in every direction. Had their actually been a raid, the casualties from a direct hit on the building would have been tremendous, due to the fact that students were bunched together in both halls.

But the fact is that there was no air raid at all.

In case of a "stand-by," signal from the Army, five blasts will be rung on the school fire bell. The school should then be evacuated--NOT BEFORE! The stand-by signal does not constitute an air raid alert. It is given long before city sirens are blown, in plenty of time for the evacuation of the school even before the regular alert signal is sounded.

REMEMBER---Do not leave the building for your home-shelter until you have been notified or until FIVE BLASTS OF THE FIRE BELL have been given.

The Amplifier wishes to announce that space in forthcoming issues is still available to candidates who have not yet had their one-hundred words published.

These contributions will not be edited unless requested. All matter received will be printed.
