From the Vault: Smoking lounge still has potential

This method of prevention was quite effective until recent years when the lack of student interest in such a committee left the lounge unprotected from the problems now experienced by the administration.

Rollins is now attempting to re-establish such a committee from among the students using the area.

Originally a set of rules governing the behavior of the patrons of the lounge was composed and a committee was assigned to see that those rules were followed. The "lounge constitution," as the set of rules is called, set aside the area. Provided that the users maintain the area and keep it clean of litter. This and other parts of the original agreements have, of late, fallen by the wayside.

The smoking lounge was originally Rollins' brainchild. He came up with the idea as an alternative to the constant problem of people smoking in the rest rooms and other places on the school grounds. As a solution the area currently in use was cleared out by a group of students and officially designated as a smoking lounge.

Though there are no state regulations against a facility of this type on school property, other schools have not readily accepted the idea. Hence, many are still dealing with the problems once encountered at West Linn.

As a pioneer of the idea, Rollins receives calls from other schools regarding the success of the lounge. In response to the success, many schools have followed suit and established similar facilities where smokers can go during non-class time to enjoy a puff.

The lounge is now as much a part of West Linn

High as it has been for some time, and even with the problems experienced for the past few years, it's likely to remain, and hold its own little niche in the student society.

Though the lounge has its problems it has effectively done what it was designed for, and because of it, the student body no longer must deal with the smoky rest rooms and other problems of the pre-lounge years.
