Le Guin shares with West Linn readers

Ursula Le Guin

Le Guin narrated the history of how she began to write. She described the difference between planning short stories or stories that required many background research. Questions were taken after she had finished her reading. A sample question was whether or not she would continue writing. With a laugh, she replied, "Honey, I'm 81." Other questions and answers were met with laughter brought up the spirit and happiness to the otherwise quiet crowd.

Around 8 p.m., Le Guin departed followed by a large wave of applause.

Born in 1929, Le Guin, who was born as Ursula Kroeber, grew up in Berkeley, Calif. She attended Radcliffe College and later did graduate work at Columbia University. In Paris in 1953, she married a historian, Charles A. Le Guin. They have lived in Portland, Ore. since 1958 and have three children and four grandchildren.
