Congress could vote on EFCA before year's end

WASHINGTON, D.C. — AFL-CIO President Richard Trumka told reporters last week that there could be a vote on the Employee Free Choice Act (EFCA) when Congress returns after the midterm elections.

When asked if he had received a commitment from Democratic leaders on Capitol Hill to move EFCA during the lame-duck session, Trumka told reporters on a conference call to "stay tuned."

"All I would say to you is stay tuned. That would be my best answer to you," Trumka said.

EFCA is a labor law reform bill long sought by the labor movement that would make it easier for workers to form a union, set timelines on bargaining a first contract, and stiffen penalties for labor law violations. The bill has majority support in Congress, but has been blocked by Senate filibusters.
