tiate community benefits agreements and project labor agreements at the City of Portland and Multnomah County that ensure both that the work is done union and that women and minority apprentices and journeymen have opportunities on the job. Myers chairs a steering committee that is advising Prosper Portland on what course to chart for the Broadway Corridor.

On April 11, the Prosper Portland board chose Continuum Partners of Denver as the project's "master plan advisers."

Prosper Portland and Continuum have committed to sign a "community benefits agreement" CBA that would work with unions to meet goals for women and minority participation in the workforce. The details are expected to be worked out by next spring. The Healthy Communities Coalition is calling for the agreement to be at least as strong as the model CBA the City of Portland worked out with the Metropolitan Alliance for Workforce Equity.

OREGON BUILDING TRADES COUNCIL

As we celebrate Labor Day, let us not forget to embrace the unrepresented worker who doesn't get the benefits our brothers and sisters know every worker deserves.
