Vigor sale to investment firm finalized, new CEO named

Global investment firm The Carlyle Group and private equity firm Stellex Capital Management announced Oct. 14 that they have closed on their acquisition of Vigor Industrial LLC and MHI Holdings LLC. They appointed Jim Marcotuli as CEO of the newly created company, which has been named Titan Acquisition Holdings.

Frank Foti, Vigor's founding CEO, stepped out of that role, but will remain an investor in the new parent company and serve as its vice chairman of the Board of Directors.

Vigor builds and repairs ships and performs complex fabrication projects for several industries. The company employs 2,300 people and operates eight dry docks across the Pacific Northwest and Alaska. It has a large union workforce at the Portland Shipyard on Swan Island, with approximately 750 workers currently employed there. The shipyard's workforce fluctuates, and can at times top 1,000 workers. Another 405 union workers are employed at Vigor Works (formerly Oregon Iron Works) at facilities in Clackamas, Oregon, and Vancouver, Wash.

In Puget Sound, the union workforce is around 250 to 300 at Washington Marine Repair Seattle, Vigor Marine Seattle, and Vigor Shipyard Seattle.

The shipyard workers are represented by 10 unions affiliated with the Metal Trades Council of Portland and Vicinity, and the Puget Sound Metal Trades Council. They are in the middle of a contract that expires Nov. 30, 2021.

MHI Holdings is a non-union ship repair and maintenance company in Norfolk, Virginia, and is owned by Stellex. It has about 800 employees.

For the past 30 years, Marcotuli has served in a number of executive and operating roles with Carlyle portfolio companies and in industries spanning defense, aerospace, transportation, and automotive. Most recently he served as the interim chairman and CEO of Remington Outdoor Company and prior to that served as CEO of North American Bus Industries (NABI).

At press time, it was not clear whether the headquarters will remain in Portland.
