CNN pays $76 million to settle union-busting complaint

It's the biggest settlement in the 84-year history of the National Labor Relations Board. CNN agreed Jan. 10 to pay $76 million to more than 300 broadcast technicians who were fired in 2003 when CNN ended its contract with a closely-managed unionized contractor as part of an elaborate scheme to get rid of the union. The fired technicians worked for CNN in Washington, D.C., and New York City and were the only union group at CNN. To avoid hiring more than half of them, which would have required CNN to bargain as a successor employer, CNN discriminated extensively against union member applicants.

The settlement came just before CNN hosted a Jan. 14 Democratic presidential debate at Drake University. NABET-CWA was threatening to picket the event, and Democratic contenders said they intended to honor the picket line.

Jordan Cove LNG pulls application for key permit

The union-backed Jordan Cove Energy Project announced Jan. 24 that it was withdrawing its application for a key permit for the natural gas project. Pembina—the Canadian company behind the $10 billion project—wants to build a 229-mile-long pipeline to a new liquefied natural gas export terminal in Coos Bay, on Oregon's south coast. The company needs the removal-fill permit for dredging in Coos Bay. Pembina announced the withdrawal of its removal-fill permit one day after the Oregon Department of State Lands denied the company's request for an extension and indicated the permit would likely be denied.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) is expected to make a final determination on the project next month. With a favorable FERC ruling, the company could argue that federal laws override state laws.

Prior to Pembina's pulling its permit application, on Jan. 7, labor unions turned out in force for a Coos Bay City Council meeting, where councilors were voting on a land-use application for dredging in the channel of Coos Bay. The City Council had hired the Lane Council of Governments (LCOG) to provide an analysis of the application and a recommendation on action. LCOG proposed denying the application. Despite that, the council voted 4-3 to approve the application.
