WORKER SAFETY

Oregon Building Trades COVID task force lauded as potential model

As of late September, the United States had an estimated 6.8 million cases of COVID-19 and 200,275 deaths. COVID-19 has taken a toll, and workers are best off taking precautions. But in Oregon, there have been only one or two outbreaks at construction sites. One factor may be a COVID-19 task force set up by the Oregon Building Trades Council. Since June, the task force has been sharing and promoting best practices, and visiting construction job sites together with contractors and a representative of Oregon OSHA—to check if workers are wearing masks and socially distancing, and to see what steps employers are taking to protect them. On Sept. 24, those efforts got some national recognition when Building Trades executive secretary Robert Camarillo and Oregon OSHA occupational health consultant Averie Foster were invited to talk about the task force at a nationwide webinar organized by the Center for Construction Research and Training.

BUILDING COMMUNITY

LCSA raising funds as COVID, fire, and recession hit union families

Labor's Community Service Agency (LCSA) is ramping up its fall and winter fundraising program to help families hit hard by the pandemic, recession, and fires. To date, the agency has served 700 families with $125,000 in assistance through its Helping Hands Temporary Hardship Program since COVID-19 hit the region. It is now preparing for a predicted fall round of layoffs, an eventual lift on the statewide eviction moratorium, come-due utility bills, and unexpected childcare costs. And the holidays are just around the corner. LCSA is planning an innovative drive-thru Presents from Partners event this year, with a goal of serving 900 kids (up from 300 last year). They also want to distribute $15,000 in gift cards to families that attend. The gift cards can be used for holiday gifts in lieu of the thousands of toys kids typically pick from.

Also on the docket is the fall and winter gift card program. The goal this year is to provide 400 families with $20,000 in holiday meal cards throughout November and December for their holiday celebrations (up from 120 families served last year).

For all of these safety-net programs, union members must be referred to LCSA by their respective union local.

But to pull all this off takes money. LCSA is now accepting donations from locals, councils, individuals, vendors, and businesses.
