Powell's Books workers press for recall rights to jobs

When COVID-19 hit in March 2020, Powell's Books closed all locations and laid off 397 employees. Unlike workers at other retailers, Powell's workers had a union contract that offered them recall rights when jobs reappear. Members of International Longshore and Warehouse Union (ILWU) Local 5, they filled out recall forms, and waited. Powell's airport store closed permanently, but the company eventually reopened its flagship Burnside store and its Hawthorne and Cedar Hills stores, and has brought back about 150 workers so far.

But on April 6, 2021, Powell's CEO Patrick Bassett announced that workers' recall rights are now expired. That relies on an interpre-

Postal Workers mourn colleagues

Postal workers and their allies held a Workers Memorial Day service April 28 at the East Portland Post Office to commemorate postal workers who have lost their lives to COVID-19. At the same time, they condemned postal management's bungling of keeping workers safe from the coronavirus, and they called for the removal of Postmaster General Louis DeJoy. USPS has been one of the hardest hit federal agencies, with 160 lives lost to the disease to date; 52,000 workers have tested positive, and nearly 8,000 still have not returned to work. Union officials said mail volume is at Christmas holiday levels, yet workers are having a hard time getting personal protective equipment, testing, hazard pay, and vaccines. At the mic (left) is Joe Cogan, president of American Postal Workers Union Local 128.
