Help needed for Washington workers' comp expansion advisory group

The Washington Department of Labor & Industries (L&I) is convening a work group to investigate how to expand access to the state's workers' compensation system for domestic workers and day laborers. The Domestic Workers Work Group will include domestic workers, day laborers, employers, and individuals who represent these workers (unions, nonprofits, or employers who place or hire domestic workers and day laborers) or educate and organize household employers. Members will be appointed by Gov. Jay Inslee.

Domestic workers and day laborers are generally considered people who work at a private residence such as a house cleaner, gardener, nanny, maintenance worker or home care worker.

For more information or to apply, email Sue Hernandez at hern235@lni.wa.gov. Requests for applications must be submitted to L&I by June 22. The work group will meet remotely and deliver recommendations to Inslee and legislative committees by Nov. 4, 2022.
