

WHY IT SUCCEEDS

Because It's for One Thing Only, and Cottage Grove People Appreciate This.

Nothing can be good for everything. Doing one thing well brings success. Doan's Kidney Pills are for one thing only.

For weak or disordered kidneys. Here is Cottage Grove evidence to prove their worth.

Mrs. C. J. Leum, 725 S. Second St., says: "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills a good remedy for kidney complaint as I have used them at different times when my kidneys were out of order and when I felt run down. My kidneys acted irregularly, too, but Doan's Kidney Pills purchased at the New Era Drug Store always gave me relief from these attacks and benefited me in every way."

Price 60c at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Leum had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y. f17-24

"Ole and Inga Talk It Over"

BY J. D. SMULL, IN THE ALEXANDRIA, MINN., POST-NEWS

III THEY ATTEND THE RALLY.

There was quite a string of automobiles along the road when Mr. and Mrs. Ole Hanson turned their car into the main highway and headed for town to attend the Non-Partisan rally. When they arrived in the small town and parked their car there was a large assemblage of farmers' cars along the street and groups of farmers were scattered along the main street, all in animated conversation.

"Do all these farmers belong to the league?" inquired Mrs. Inga Hanson of her husband.

"You bet they do," returned Ole, "and lots more of 'em."

"If all these farmers know what they want and they think they can run the government right, why don't they hire a lot of busy organizers and socialists to run league for 'em? Why don't they run it themselves?" inquired Inga.

"Well, you see, it was them fellows who started it and us farmers will have to get educated up to running things before we can go it alone," said Ole.

"I guess you be pretty slow getting educated as long as you pay bills for them fellows," remarked Inga as they walked toward the hall.

When they were seated pretty well to the front Inga began to look around and size up the crowd, which by this time comfortably filled the hall. Four or five fellows whom she did not recognize were busily engaged talking to a few farmers whom Inga knew to be men whom her husband always looked upon as shiftless farmers who were always in debt and who spent most of their time farming on the town side walk.

"Who's them fellows up there?" asked Inga, pointing to the strangers.

"Oh, they're our organizers," said Ole.

"I didn't see 'em around when we couldn't get anybody to shock our wheat last fall, and the town men come out and helped us," said Inga.

Just then Jim Bower, the organizer who had got Ole into the league, appeared with a very short stout man who had a red face and gray side whiskers. His hair was long and he had the appearance of an evangelist. Jim Bower slipped over to Ole Hanson and whispered in his ear and Ole started to get up.

"No you don't, Ole Hanson," said Inga, hanging onto his coat. "It's bad enough to wear a button without making a fool of yourself in public."

Jim Bower had asked Ole to introduce the speaker but when he saw the determined look on Inga's face he went back to the speaker and introduced him himself.

Salter Thomas Hills, who addressed the farmer leagues, was a socialistic agitator who had spent his life preaching everything from a mild form of socialism to rank anarchy; it depended upon who was paying and what he was hired to do. When North Dakota followed Towley he immediately joined the Non-Partisan forces and as he was a clever talker he was useful to them. He drew a fat salary out of the league treasury.

During his speech Ole occasionally glanced at his wife to see how she was taking it but she gave no sign for some time and at last Ole whispered, "How you like that, Inga?"

"I don't see what that fellow says makes crops any bigger," returned Inga.

"He's going to get us more for 'em," whispered Ole.

Salter Thomas Hills told how fine things were in North Dakota and how, if the farmers in South Dakota had voted for Bates, they would have been the same in South Dakota. He told of the way the banks juggled the money around and fooled the down-trodden farmer and he hinted that school books taught the children capitalistic doctrines. He made much of the fact that the farmer sold his hogs for one price and when he bought bacon back they paid three times as much. When he came to this part of his speech Inga nudged Ole and whispered, "Ole, ask that fellow if his hogs is all bacon."

When the speaker had got near the end of his talk he said there were several organizers present who would receive memberships at $16 each and at this the organizers arose and pulled out small books which they explained were post-dated checks and the farmer only had to sign now and pay later.

"I wonder if that Salter Thomas Hills takes post-dated checks for his pay," remarked Inga as she and Ole passed out. Ole was delighted with the speech but he did not like the expression on Inga's face, so he said nothing. After some trading and Inga making a visit to the postoffice they started for home.

After they were out of town a ways Ole turned to Inga. "Now, Inga, I hope you're satisfied and won't ask any more foolish questions about the league."

"I'm satisfied that big paid fellow put a lot of foolish notions in your head. If somebody else pay him more he talk the other way," said Inga.

"Oh! he's a great reformer; he's just traveling around to help us farmers beat big business," said Ole, dodging a rut in the road.

"It's a mighty funny thing, if farmer go to buy a machine he got to have it tried out and be sure it work before he take it but some smooth fellow come along with crazy scheme he don't know anything about, he bite like a pickered fish," said Inga, beginning to warm up some. "I bet that fellow never do day's work in his life."

"He sure did rub it into the bank-ers," said Ole, thinking now he was on safe ground.

"Now, Ole Hanson, you and other farmer got along fine with banker come around and they make you sore at everybody so they can wind you round and get your vote. I bet they wish they had sense enough to be banker, too."

"Who's this Bates he told you to vote for?" and Inga took a piece of pulp out from a package of lunch and passed it to Ole.

"He's going to be our hog slopper governor; we're going to elect him this fall," returned Ole, chewing the pulp out with relish.

"Because a fellow slops hogs, does he make a better governor?" inquired Inga.

Ole had stood about all of Inga's questioning he could and his temper began to get the best of him. "I thought this meeting was going to cure you but you're getting worse; you're as contrary as that new cow. Can't you understand that us farmers have a right to organize and run this here government if we want to?" and Ole pushed up the gas another notch.

"Well, Ole, you was pretty satisfied before league got you; you has been making lots of money and we plan trip to Norway; now I guess you go to Bismarck if you keep on," said Inga, and in preparing to alight from the car she picked up a package which she had got to the postoffice.

"What's the package, Inga?" inquired Ole, viewing it suspiciously.

"That's some books I read about in your Leader paper," says Inga.

Just then a fine looking calf with something tied to its tail came bounding around the house and nearly ran into the automobile.

"What in thunder is the matter with that calf, what's that on its tail. I'll bet that's some of that boy Chris' work," exclaimed Ole.

Inga caught the calf and from its tail jerked off a flashy looking pennant which was marked, "Vote for Bates."

"I guess men and calves is a good deal alike when they get this league business stuck on 'em, they just quit thinking and run around kicking," remarked Inga as she walked toward the kitchen door.

Fish Chowder.

Peel and slice about six medium sized potatoes and three medium sized onions; boil in salt water until tender, drain off some of the water and set back on stove. Clean a haddock weighing about three pounds, cut it into four pieces and boil, removing from the fire before it cooks into pieces; drain. When cool remove bones, add to it the potatoes and onions, fourth pound butter and three or four cups milk and season with salt and pepper. Serve hot.

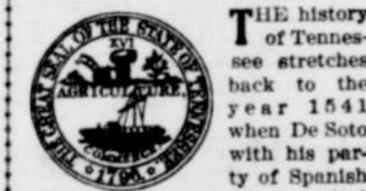

Fried Apple Pie.

Two cups flour, two teaspoons baking powder, one egg, beaten; mixed with half cup milk, large spoon of melted lard or other shortening, half teaspoon salt. Roll out in two parts. Fry in deep fat and cover while hot with fried apple sauce seasoned with cinnamon and nutmeg.

The Story of Our States

By JONATHAN BRACE
XVI.—TENNESSEE

THE history of Tennessee stretches back to the year 1541 when De Soto with his party of Spanish adventurers probably reached the present site of Memphis on the Mississippi. The French under La Salle built a fort here about 1682. The English also laid claim to this territory, including it in the grant to North Carolina. It was not until 1770 that the first permanent settlement was made by James Robertson and this was soon followed by many other settlers from North Carolina. They formed what they called the Washington district, but this was short lived as it was promptly annexed to North Carolina. In 1784 the inhabitants, indignant over North Carolina's attitude toward them, declared their independence and formed the State of Franklin or Frankland. As this secession was not countenanced by North Carolina, for a number of years a state of confusion existed with two sets of officers trying to govern. Meanwhile the settlement suffered severely from hostile Indians and from the Spanish, who still held Louisiana, and controlled the Mississippi river. In 1790 North Carolina finally ceded this territory to the United States. By 1796 the population had increased to over 60,000, so Tennessee was admitted as the sixteenth state of the Union.

At the outbreak of the Civil war, Tennessee joined the Confederacy. In 1869, when the state was readmitted to the Union, there was much disorder during the reconstruction period. This led to the formation of the Ku Klux Klan, the influence of which quickly spread throughout the Southern states. This secret organization took into its own hands the suppression of crime and the administration of justice.

Tennessee contains 42,022 square miles, and is sometimes called the Volunteer state. It is named after its principal river, which is a Cherokee word meaning "Crooked River" or "bend in the river."
