The double standard of morals is at about the ratio of 16 to 1.

The railroads carry our burdens—but they make their own freight rates.

An exchange speaks of the electoral college as the "electrical" college. Shocking!

Grief can only be understood by those who have suffered in a like manner.

A rolling stone gathers no moss, but anyway it keeps out of other people's road.

A pastor sold his church in order to collect $40 back salary. Members of a church who would make it necessary for their pastor to go to such extremes to collect what he had earned twice over, probably had very little use for the building anyway.

If human beings were on the tax rolls, there are a lot of people who would not place such a high estimate on themselves.

It is better to exaggerate truth than scandal.

Trying to get around as lively as the youngsters is what makes some people feel old.

Some states have laws forbidding the portrayal of the acts of criminals on the stage. Some acting is more criminal than the stuff prohibited.

Over-estimation of self is pretty disgusting but it is doubtful if that keeps a person down as much as under-estimation of one's ability.

People will soon have to go to New York to see the European art galleries.
