WHO WAS THE PUP?

He was only a pup.
But if he was only a pup he had wormed his way into the hearts of many friends. He received caresses such as many a human might envy.

He could not talk. His mental equipment was most modest, but he knew who loved him. He knew which hand to lick and which to bite. The little tot he loved could pull a bone from between his teeth while one who threatened the welfare of that little tot found that the teeth were sharp.

He could not talk. At least he could not articulate words, but he could wag his tail to better purpose than many wag their tongues.

He could not mouth honeyed phrases but he was satisfied to lick even the hands of those he loved.

His wants were few. A few crumbs from the table and a gunny sack in an old box under his little master's bed were multitude for him.

His business on earth was small. To romp and play with little tots. To race with other dogs and guard the little ones he loved were about the only things there were for him to do, but he did these things better than many humans who seem to have little to do.

He did not have a college education. He was short on etiquette. He did not know that it is not considered good form to pick up articles of food thrown onto vacant lots. He did not know that they might contain poison thrown there by those wishing to remove him from the circle of his friends.

One day his little master found him on the street. Quite plainly something was wrong. He was struggling in the last paroxysms of poisoning. First aid at a physician's office failed to save him. He looked into the misty eyes of his little master. Plainly he said, "I'm sorry to have to leave you. I have not been here long. You have been good to me and I have tried to show my love in the only ways known to a dog. Maybe you can find another dog to take my place, one who will guard you, as I have done, one who will sleep under your bed at night, as I have done, one who will ask only a caress now and then, one who will romp and play with you, as I have done, but you will never find one to love you more than I have. I may not be able to think. I may not have traveled in the best of society, but I never was so much of a dog as to put out poison for another of God's creatures. I feel that it is all over. Good bye and good luck to you and yours."

There were more tear-stained faces at the funeral than attend the bier of many who walk with human beings, and the tears and the sobs welled from the hearts of little tots robbed of a friend they loved.
Who was the pup?

THINGS WE THINK

Things Others Think and What We Think of the Things Others Think

A husband who "lays" around the house deserves to be henpecked.

No one knows quite so much about raising babies as those who haven't any.

The man who tries to wind himself into your sympathies gets to be a bore after awhile.

Some women try to pray their husbands into heaven while nagging them to the other place.

Things appear unusually dark to a man just after he completes burning up his money.

There's such a thing as becoming so wise to all con games that you will pass up a real gold brick.

Congress is talking of adjourning. We are pleased to see it get down to something that it is likely to do.

If you draw too much on the future you may find your new leaf all marked up before you turn it.

There is not enough education, and too much of that which educates the boy and girl away from work.

A newspaper says candidates for the legislature are usually about half of them lawyers. Maybe that's why lawyers have the reputation of being such awful liars.

The muck-raking magazines are being sent by freight now—probably being classified as agricultural implements.

A book agent has pleaded guilty in municipal court. If they should all get as conscience-stricken as this one the wheels of justice certainly would be clogged.

Some folks don't take any better care of their livestock than they do of their children and then wonder why the business doesn't pay.

The young man just making a start in the world thinks his future promise is assured the first time he is called out of town on business.

We can hardly conceive of a place in heaven for the church saint who though able to work, lets his wife earn the living.

A Texas woman claims to be 132 years of age. She probably thought it was no use trying to conceal it any longer.

The man who gave the preacher who married him a worthless check and took good money in change, should not complain if he finds his wife wears department store hair and has a pneumatic form.

Isn't it peculiar that a man's prominent position in life raises his wife to the same position but a woman's prominent position in public life seems to obliterate her husband.

A magazine makes the statement that 100,000 people now spell it "thru." We have yet to hear from an authoritative source that the other 116 millions spell it "through."

Firestone CORD TIRES

The section at the right was cut from a new Cord of the same size. Careful measurements show that only 1/3 of the tread of the tire on the Yellow Cab has been worn away after this long, grueling test. The carcass is intact after more than 11,000,000 revolutions.

Firestone Cords have averaged over 10,000 miles on Chicago Yellow Cabs (1,200 cabs all Firestone equipped). In thousands of instances, they have given from 15,000 to 30,000 miles.

Look at the tread—scientifically angled against skid, massive and heavy in the center where the wear comes, tapered at the edges to make steering easy and to protect the carcass against destructive hinging action of high tread edges. The carcass is air bag expanded to insure uniform tension and paralleling of every individual cord. It is double "gum dipped" to make sure that each cord is thoroughly insulated with rubber.

This is the reason why Firestone Cords unfailingly deliver extraordinary mileage. It explains the unanimous demand of thoughtful tire buyers for these values. The local Firestone dealer will continue to provide the personal service that makes Firestone tire comfort and economy complete.
