FOREST PROTECTION WEEK SET ASIDE BY PRESIDENT

Efforts to save the forests of the country from fire will be commemorated during the week of April 22-28, in accordance with a proclamation issued by President Harding. The idea of a special week to be devoted to forest fire prevention originated here in the Pacific northwest in 1920, and the observance has since become nationwide. The proclamation calls attention to the importance of forest preservation to the industrial and commercial life of the nation and to individual welfare, and points out that fires which are the result of carelessness or thoughtlessness do great damage, seriously threatening the timber supply and endangering the cover of the watersheds of streams used for navigation and irrigation.

President Harding urges the governors of the various states to set the week apart and bring about its proper observance in the schools, through civic and other associations, by means of the press and in all proper ways. In 1922 a large number of governors and mayors of many cities proclaimed the week. This is the third year that forest protection week has been fixed by presidential proclamation, and its observance has been very general in the forested regions. Last year it was combined with the fiftieth anniversary of the first Arbor day.
