County School Supt.

NOTICE.
To whom it may concern:
Whereas, The trout and other fish inhabiting the waters of Frank Brice creek, Layng creek, Rat creek, Wilson creek and Cedar creek, situated in Lane county, state of Oregon, are being threatened with extinction from excessive angling and from other causes; and

Whereas, The State Game Commission of the state of Oregon is desirous of protecting the trout and other fish inhabiting the waters of Frank Brice creek, Layng creek, Rat creek, Wilson creek and Cedar creek, situated in Lane county, state of Oregon;

Now, Therefore, by authority of law vested in said State Game Commission of the state of Oregon under section 8, chapter 66, Oregon laws for 1921, notice is hereby given that said Frank Brice creek, Layng creek, Rat creek, Wilson creek and Cedar creek, situated in Lane county, state of Oregon, are closed to angling of any kind or in any manner, for trout or other fish, from and after the 5th day of May, 1923, until again reopened by the State Game Commission of the state of Oregon.

And it is and shall be unlawful for any person to take or angle for trout or other fish in the above named closed streams from and after the 5th day of May, 1923, until the same have been reopened by order of the State Game Commission of the state of Oregon.

Any and all persons who severally or jointly violate the provisions of this order will be prosecuted as by statute provided.

Dated at Portland, Oregon, this 9th day of April, 1923.

APRIL FOOL.
In many countries of Europe as well as in America the first of April has long been appropriated to a facetious custom for which no very satisfactory origin has been established. To send some unsuspecting or ignorant person on some bootless errand is the great endeavor of the day.

One theory traces the custom to Noah, who sent out his dove on such a quest. Being unable to find aught on which to alight it was compelled to return to the ark in shame. Another theory is that it originated in the miracle plays representing the sending of the Savior from Annas to Caiaphas and from Pilate to Herod. Still another theory is that it originated in France when New Year's day was changed to the first of January and April was then made the fourth instead of the second month in the year, resulting in the first of April being left destitute of anything but a burlesque of its former festivities, which had continued from the Romans down to that time.

Whatever the origin, and in spite of the fun, it comes freighted with helpful suggestions.

First, it reminds us of the fact that in the pursuits of life, many will be but all-fools-day efforts, fate having sent us on a fruitless errand.

Second, it reminds us, after having been the dupe of our associates, that however smart we may be there are always others with brains larger and wits sharper than our own.

Third, the day with its mischievous missions reveals our natural tendency to trust our fellows. It is not natural to distrust—we have to learn to suspect insincerity. This is not a fault. Better far to be fooled all our days than to lose one's confidence in humanity.

Fourth, it should tend to make us look before we leap. A blind, heedless obedience to the will of another debases us to the level of the animal and robs us of the one thing that distinguishes us from brute creation—the power to think and plan for ourselves.

Fifth, it ought to remind us that what may be a pleasure and profit to us may mean sorrow and shame to another and that therefore it is ignoble to put upon another anything which we would call mean if it were imposed upon ourselves.

Lastly, our all-fools-day experiences and observations ought to teach us that if life is a large, long April fool's day, whether it makes or mars our short stay here depends largely upon the spirit in which we take the real or imaginary impositions of our fellows. If we take them with a frown the world's laugh will grow louder and harsher with each outbreak of our anger; but if we face them with a smile the world will laugh, but it will be a laugh devoid of malice—a laugh, in fact, full of approval and jolly good comradeship.

Saved California Raisins.
In the great raisin-grape growing district of central California the drying is done in trays in the open air. Great loss would result if rain should fall on the partially dried fruit; hence when rain is expected the information is immediately spread throughout the valley by telephone and telegraph, and every available person is set to stacking the trays. Even the schools may be closed and the children pressed into service, and woe betide the unfortunate tramp caught in the district who has a disinclination to become acquainted with work. This is another instance indicative of the valuable service rendered by the weather bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture in warning fruit growers against possible losses.

NOT DUE TO CIVILIZATION
Investigator Denies That Baldness Comes as a Result of Habits of Modern Man.
Shedding the hair of the head is part of the present evolution of civilized humanity, claims Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, of the Smithsonian Institution, who has made an extensive anthropological study of Americans whose ancestors have lived at least three generations on this continent. It would be wrong to blame the reduced vitality shown by the hair on any particular habits of civilized man or on disease conditions.

These may play a part, he says, but the real cause is hereditary. The hair tends toward an earlier senility and loss because it has become of less use to man living under modern conditions than it was in the past. Nature does not tolerate for long what has become useless or weakened.

It is the men who are getting bald, he finds. Women lose hair, too, he says, but not nearly so rapidly as the males. He is sure the women, do not mislead him, as all of them were examined with their hair undone and freely hanging down. Although Doctor Hrdlicka explains the predisposition to baldness among males to inheritance, he adds words of woe to the flapper by explaining that the reason women have longer-clinging hair is that "possibly the weight of the female hair acts as a tonic."—Science Service.

MARK TWAIN'S SENSITIVE EAR
Biographer Records Fact That Certain Sounds Would Drive Humorist to Border of Distraction.
Mark Twain passed middle life without music meaning more to him than a pretty tune or a prodigious performance, a rather remarkable fact when one considers what an artist the man was in his own field. If Mark Twain had been stone deaf the fact might have been less remarkable, but we have already noted that he could play the piano sufficiently well by ear to provide his own accompaniments for the negro spirituals, and it is of further record that he was a man so singularly sensitive to certain sounds that they sometimes drove him to the borders of hysteria. Mr. Paine has touched slightly on this peculiarity, but it was actually a more serious consideration in estimating the humorist's life than the authorized biography would lead one to believe. He relates the incident of the clocks in the home of Thomas Nast, the cartoonist, when Twain and George W. Cable, in the course of a reading tour, lodged for the night with the Nast family. But that was not the only time that the ticking of a clock so tortured Twain's nerves that he took high-handed means to silence it.—From "Mark Twain and Music," by Ralph Holmes, in the Century.

Russia Coming Back?
The old-time scenes at American railway junctions, when the brakeman came through the train shouting: "Blankville, 20 minutes stop for supper," are being duplicated in Russia as the normal conditions of travel are being restored and railway station restaurants, foodless and closed for four years, are opening again. Passengers during the revolution had nothing to eat on long journeys except what they brought with them, but now practically every station restaurant offers almost a pre-war bill of fare. As the trains pull in a scramble for food ensues that would rival an American quick-lunch counter during the rush hours. Some of the more important trains have dining cars, but they are patronized only by first-class passengers, and even many of these enjoy the rush at the station restaurants more than the decorum of the wagon-restaurant.

Women as Strikebreakers.
The king of Spain is believed to have displayed a stroke of genius by calling on the women of Spain to take the places of the striking postmen, the Woman's Weekly remarks. The post-office strike has caused great confusion in transportation and delivery of the mails and much sabotage was indulged in. The women of Spain, who have received probably fewer privileges than in any other European country, responded with enthusiasm, thousands entering the service, and they soon showed efficiency and gave satisfaction. The move proved popular with the people of every class, since it added to the number of bread-winners of the country. So successful has the experiment proved and so willing have the men been to stop work and go on strike, that there is talk of applying the plan to other departments of the government.

I happened to be in the juvenile court the other day. A little girl, who had never known mother or father, was sobbing as the judge began to talk to her. The judge said to her very tenderly, "Why, Florence, you must not be afraid. Did you think we brought you here to make you unhappy? Why, no, we bring little girls here not to make life hard for them, but to make life easy. We want you to tell us how we can make you happy. We want to make you the happiest little girl in the world. We want you to have love and friends and kindness. It isn't fair that you should have a hard life. We want you to have the best there is, like other little girls have."

Oh how many unmothered children there are in this world. And oh, how hard it is for the world, even in its tenderest mood, to make up that great loss to any child. But what a help it would be if the world would always put kindly arms about the little lonely homeless ones in this spirit and mothered them more than it corrected them.

Firestone

Will Not Increase Prices on Solid and Pneumatic Truck Tires Until May 1st

Never has Firestone been so well situated to give operators the greatest measure of Cushion, Traction and Mileage at the lowest cost.

Today, economical manufacturing and distribution are showing the fullest results. Our favorable purchases of rubber, in advance of the 150% increase brought about by the British Crude Rubber Restriction Act, aid further in maintaining the old price levels.

Let the Firestone Service Dealers Keep Your Trucks Moving

There are 800 Firestone Service Dealers, located in the principal trucking centers, fitted by natural ability and a thorough knowledge of trucking, to help you choose the right tire for your roads, loads and service.

Price Protection as Long as Stocks Last

Additional tires will be supplied to Service Dealers only so far as our present output will permit. Consult the nearest Firestone Service Dealer at once regarding your truck tire needs. He is in an advantageous position to give you an unusual tire—a specialized service—and prices which may not be duplicated in months.

Whatever the Truck Service—the Firestone Dealer Has the Right Tire

Firestone developments of the past two years have made pace for the industry and set new records in sure, economical performance. Five tires—the Heavy Duty Cushion, the Truck Type Cord, the Maxi-Cushion, the Giant Solid and the High Type—cover the needs of motor haulage in all its forms. Each has a distinct work which it does best. Each possesses a definite and special value for the operator.
