OREGON EDITORS ARE TO CLIMB SNOW-CAPPED HOOD

Legion Post Hopes to Make Annual Outing on Wonder Mountain a National Event.

The Oregon State Editorial association will participate this year in one of the most unique conventions in the history of the state's organization of newspaper men. Plans are complete for participation by the editors in the third annual Mount Hood climb of the Hood River post, American Legion, for which, it is estimated, there will be this year 750 participants. The combined editorial and Legion party is expected to set a record in northwestern mountain climbing. The number that will gather at the highland forest camp, on the banks of the sparkling Tilly Jane creek and at the very edge of Mount Hood's perpetual snow, will far exceed that of any former recreational party ever held in the state, and the legionnaires, whose guides last year escorted 111 to the summit of the peak, expect the "Over the Top" party this year to be doubled.

Delegates to the editorial convention will assemble in Hood River Friday morning, July 13. The day's activities will include tours of inspection through the refrigerated cold storage plants of the Apple Growers association and quarters of canning, vinegar and elder companies, registration and a business session.

On the evening of the first day of the convention the Hood River chamber of commerce will entertain the visiting newspaper folk with a banquet at the Columbia Gorge hotel, noted as the northwest's most fully equipped tourist hostelry. Among the speakers at the banquet will be: Hon. J. Adam Bede, formerly representative in congress from Minnesota, who is known nationwide for his wit; Hon. N. J. Sinnott, representative in congress from the eastern Oregon district; Judge Fred W. Wilson, president of the Oregon Bar association, and Capt. Geo. Wilbur, commander of the Department of Oregon, American Legion.

Saturday morning the editorial party will leave Hood River early enough to reach the mile-high Legion camp for an early lunch. The journey, by automobile, through the valley trunk of the famed Mount Hood Loop highway, through the orchards, fruit of which is known in the markets of all the world, and on into the Oregon National forest. An afternoon business session of the editors will be held on the mountain for which they will be provided with a natural amphitheatre in a mountain ravine, equipped with white firs and hemlocks.

Parties will leave the base camp for an ascent of the mountain at daybreak on Sunday and Monday mornings. Those who prefer the less strenuous sightseeing, excursions will be conducted on trips to the ice cascades of the glaciers and over the expenses of blossoming meadows in the vicinity of the camp.

The members of the Editorial association will be honor guests of the Legion this year. Through the courtesy of the Legion post and the citizens of Hood River, the excursion into the scenic mountain region will be afforded the newspaper folk without a cent of expense on their part. Through the cooperation of Adjutant General George A. White, blankets of the Hood River national guard company will be made available for the editorial party, thus relieving them of the bother of transporting such equipment.

The Hood River Legion post initiated the Mount Hood climb in 1921. The plan materialized when a party of ex-service men was considering a summer vacation reunion of members of old Company 12, Oregon coast artillery, mobilized from Hood River in 1917 for great war service. The mountain party, open to public participation, was suggested. Legion members saw how the activities of the post could be turned toward bringing about a popularization of Mount Hood by affording an annual outing at a minimum of expense through Legion organization. The ordinary excursion into the mountain region, with its costly packing and guide service, places the recreation beyond the average vacationist. The annual Legion parties, however, make it possible for anyone to visit the mountain and make the ascent to the top for only a nominal charge. The Legion post does not aspire toward making the recreational venture one of profit.

The Hood River post has already done more toward making Oregonians actually acquainted with Mount Hood than any other organization of the state, with the exception of the Massas, and the well attended party of this year is expected to double the exploitation results of any past year.

It is the aim of the Hood River Legion post gradually to enlarge the scope of their annual summer party until it gains national note. Already through the channels of the national Legion organization and the medium of various Legion publications, the climb has gained an impetus that would have been impossible for any organization of strictly local character to accomplish. Hood River legionnaires, contemplating their undertaking, see in the not distant future a permanent lodge on the side of Mount Hood, where annually during the mid-summer season they will stage sports on the snow fields during the chateaufort season.

No member of a former Legion club has failed to grasp the full significance of the aspiration of the Hood River Legion post, and the ex-service men, who really inspired the Hood River editorial convention this year, are jubilant over their opportunity to carry the newspaper folk into the region of their inspiring charm, Oregon's mountain wonderland, where the impress of a day's outing will last for a lifetime.

AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM TO BE SUBJECT OF CONFERENCE

Oregon Agricultural College, Corvallis, June 4.—An agricultural program for Oregon with due regard to farm production and marketing has been announced for the fourth week in January, 1924, at the agricultural college. Leaders of farmers organizations, research and extension specialists and commercial and business men will take part in shaping up the program.

The two problems of producing and marketing are so closely linked that neither can be solved successfully without regard to the other. In the consideration of this relationship the weakest links of the state-wide agricultural chain will be pointed out and strengthened.

Organization will be on commodity lines. Delegates interested primarily in fruit will form one division and work to draw up a program that will become one section of the state agricultural program. Livestock, farm crops and dairy groups and others will act on similar lines, with special sections on agricultural credits and transportation. Important agricultural, marketing, commercial and business associations will be asked to assist in developing this program and getting it into action throughout the state.

SILTCOOS LAKE EXCURSION PLANNED BY BUSINESS MEN

An excursion to Siltcoos lake is planned for the near future. It is sponsored by Eugene business men, with Melvin Hansen, Eugene realty dealer, as chairman of the committee in charge, and will be held on or about June 20.

The party will leave the Eugene station at 7 a. m., arriving at Siltcoos station at 9:50, following which a three-hour boat ride on the lake is planned. Landing at Ada the visitors will be guests of the Maple Creek and Ada grange at a free picnic dinner and the afternoon will be spent in private excursions to view the berry, dairy and fishing industries in that vicinity. The return trip will be made the same day. The railway fare for the round trip will be $4. Reservations can be made through Mr. Hansen.

Plenty of self confidence is all right—but you never lose anything by listening to well-intentioned advice.

WHERE TRYING NEVER SUCCEEDS

The man who makes every move with the idea of meeting popular approval seldom completely achieves his ambition.

Taking the wind out of some people reduces their avoirdupois to the minimum.

When a woman dresses she goes too much on the assumption that men see only the things meant for them to see.

A woman never passes in front of a mirror without stopping for a personal inspection—neither does a man if he thinks no one is looking.
