SCHWAB ON BOYS.

Unquestionably there is a lesson to be learned in the statement recently credited to Charles M. Schwab to the effect that the sons of the rich need not apply to him for jobs.

Mr. Schwab, who has by his own efforts risen from a lowly position to one where he is a welcome guest of the rich and can match fortunes with many of them, must have taught him something which has caused him to make the statement credited to him.

And we wonder if the lesson his statement would teach is applicable only to the idle sons of the rich, or sons of the idle rich.

Is the idle son of the rich any less capable of holding a job than the son of poor parents who has no thought beyond the morrow?

It is our opinion that Mr. Schwab's boys, if he has any, are being taught lessons at the parental knee that should be broadcast for the benefit of inert sons of the poor and the well to do.

We have no way of knowing how many there are in this great country of ours among the young men who have no objective beyond earning sufficient to clothe themselves in glad raiment and to purchase the flivver in which to whirl around with the feminine moths attracted by such glad raiment and a disposition to part freely with the daily earnings.

We may not know what the total number is, but a survey of any city, no matter how small, shows a percentage large enough to indicate that there will in future years be plenty to fill the ranks of the dissatisfied who rail at fate, who claim that they never had a chance and that they have been robbed by capital.

Mr. Schwab probably made his statement to apply only to the idle sons of the rich, or to the sons of the idle rich, because he was familiar with that kind of sons, but the probability is that no young man, regardless of parentage, who has not shown that he has a definite goal set for himself, who has not shown that he is ambitious to rise above his surroundings, is put into any position of trust by Mr. Schwab.

It augurs well for the future of the youth of the country when men like Mr. Schwab make statements which indicate that the good jobs go to those who fit themselves for them.

We are impressed by the fact that the colleges of the country are more and more encouraging the young man and the young woman who earns his or her education, who has so great a desire for education that he or she does not hesitate to overcome obstacles that may overwhelm many, who see in education a means to a definite end, who do not look at it as a means of pleasantly filling in a few idle years.

Education was found to fall so long as those who got it held it in the light of something which they were entitled to get without effort on their part—so long as they felt that education secured without effort and without inconvenience to them fitted them to at once assume responsible positions.

If education is to continue to be popular with the masses—if education is to be popular and sought by high and low—if it is to be encouraged by those who pay the bill, it must be successful—it must prove that it puts young men and women in higher and better positions in the world.

Colleges have learned that education best accomplishes the purpose for which it is given (or intended to be given) when those who get it have to make some effort to secure it—when they actually get it, instead of taking it according to prescription—when those to whom it is furnished make some effort to secure it—who fit themselves for assuming responsibilities through the responsibilities they assume and the self-confidence they develop while getting that education.

Colleges, in encouraging the young man and the young woman to get education, instead of having it given them, are not only doing what is best for the young man and the young woman but are at the same time doing the thing which will hold for education its popularity, upon which it depends for willing support on the part of the masses.

FORD SHOWS SENSE.

In almost the same sentence in which Henry Ford, in a recent interview, demonstrated that he certainly is not paving the way for his nomination for the presidency, he gives the first intimation that we have known to fall from his lips to show that he has ever taken sufficient interest in politics to qualify him to fill any office.

In one sentence Mr. Ford says the labor unions are bunk and were organized by the Jews, whom Ford despises, but who are among his best customers, for their own sinister purposes when they come around to get their clutches on industry.

A little further along in the interview Mr. Ford states that the president and congress are doing about the best that they can do, that things can't happen fast in politics, that he would be unable to turn the government into a flivver-producing organization in the twinkling of an eye, that he hasn't a political mind anyway and probably would prove a bitter disappointment to those who would elevate him to high office.

We have always thought exactly the things to which Mr. Ford now gives expression. We are pleased that we have found something upon which we can agree.

Now that Mr. Ford and The Sentinel do agree that the administration is doing things about as well as they can be done, that Mr. Ford would be a bitter disappointment at the head of the government, that we need a twin-six power plant instead of the kind found in a tin lizzie, why not let things go at that and get back to a real contest between the republicans and democrats. Third parties always have been in the way and have spoiled many a match.

John Brady, of Kansas, has purchased the editorial interest in the Salem Statesman, and we have it on no less authority than Editor Claude Ingalls, of Corvallis, that John is a boy who will make The Statesman what its name implies that it should be. There is nowhere in the state greater need for a republican newspaper with backbone, with a vigorous editorial policy, than in Salem. The interests of Editor Hendricks have been so varied that he has not given the editorial end of the business the attention that it should have had. Let us trust that Editor Brady will make the newspaper business his principal business and give Salem a republican paper that will compare more than favorably with its democratic contemporary.

Convicts in the state penitentiary demand the retention of Warden Smith. This funny stuff is getting on our nerves. It's about time to get down to business and tell murderers, thieves and degenerates that they have put themselves in a position where they are supplicants for favors and that those who see fit to attempt to dictate the administration of the state's affairs will be punished for insubordination. Disrespect for law is getting to be altogether too common. A good way to start teaching respect for law is to tell criminals that society will tell them how they shall be cared for, that they can't tell society to what punishment they will submit.

FIRE STARTED CARELESSLY BURNS VAST TIMBER AREA

The Herman creek fire on the Oregon national forest in July and August, 1922, burned over 11,000 acres in the Columbia gorge and cost more than $40,000 for fire fighting labor and equipment. This forest fire was started by a careless rancher and because of the hazy condition of the atmosphere, due to smoke from other fires just as carelessly started, burned a day before it was discovered. The rancher was as little interested in reporting the fire as he had been in starting it.

Because of the highway the fire had gained and the difficult topography where it spread, a month was used in putting it under control. For a time it threatened to enter the Bull Run watershed and do serious damage to Portland's water supply.

The careless camper spent 90 days in the Multnomah county jail and is now free again. The fire scar in the gorge will remain for many years a monument to his carelessness.

NAMES OF THOSE WEDDED FIFTY YEARS OR LONGER DESIRED BY SENTINEL

Cottage Grove is famous for the longevity of its residents and incidentally for the number who have been married half a century or more.

The Sentinel would like the names of all couples who have been wedded 50 years. To the couple who have been wedded the greatest number of years The Sentinel will make a present of a year's subscription.

In publishing the names of the couples The Sentinel would like a brief biographical sketch, where they were born, where they have lived, surviving children and what they have seen that should be of particular interest to the present generation.
