BERT TRASK SAYS ONE WHO GETS MONEY FASTER THAN ONE WHO LOSTS IT

Bert Trask, who did a little sprint Thursday forenoon after a fellow who had victimized his store for twenty-four simoleans on a worthless check, is convinced that the fellow who has the money can run faster than the fellow who has lost it, due probably to the fact that "money has wings" with which to assist the possessor thereof.

A clerk in the Trask store had cashed a check for $24.50 on a small purchase while Mr. Trask was out for a few moments. When Mr. Trask returned and was shown the check he became suspicious, called the bank and learned that it had no account in the name of the person whose name appeared as signer of the check. The clerk was able to point out on the street the man who had presented the paper. Mr. Trask overhauled him and asked him to come back and convince the bank that the check was all right. This he agreed to do but on the way to the bank he changed his mind, abruptly left Mr. Trask and made motions with his legs which indicated that he intended to make himself rather scarce. Mr. Trask took up the chase but lost trace of his quarry in the woods a mile or so north of the city.

In his effort to make good his escape, the fleeing man discarded his overcoat and in one pocket was found an opened letter which had been addressed to Carl Lindquist, 1962 Eighty-third avenue, Oakland, Calif.

During the same day Marshal Pitcher became suspicious of the actions of two men in a California car. After they had been questioned by the official they took the first opportunity to get out of the city in a hurry. Pitcher believes that the bad check man had been a member of this party, that the party had been loitering about the city until the opportunity came to cash a piece of bad paper and had intended to do so at once make their getaway.

During the evening Mr. Trask, in company with Marshal Pitcher, watched the road in the vicinity in which the bad check man had disappeared, anticipating that he might attempt to reach the highway and make his getaway, but he did not appear and has not been seen since.

That night a car was stolen in Eugene. Marshal Pitcher is of the opinion that the fugitive made his way to Eugene, stole the car there and probably overtook the other members of the party somewhere to the south.

Apparently the Trask store was the only one victimized by this man, although a number of stores were victimized at about the same time by three young men who have been caught.

Locals Lose Wrestling Match. The Cottage Grove high school wrestling team was defeated by the Corvallis high school team Saturday evening at Corvallis.
