CHILDREN SOMETIMES TAKE DISEASE.

Eugene, Ore., April 30.—(To the Editor.)—Transmission of the foot and mouth disease from cattle to man is by no means rare and is more frequently seen by veterinary surgeons than by physicians. Children are especially liable to become infected by drinking unboiled milk from cows suffering from foot and mouth disease and sometimes die from the consequences of the infection. Transmission may take place through butter and cheese, through wounds in the hands and arms and indirectly through intermediate bearers. The symptoms of the disease in man consist of fever, disturbance of digestion, eruption of vesicles on the face (lips and ears), fingers, arms, chest, mucous membranes of the mouth, throat and conjunctiva, and diarrhoea, accompanied by vomiting, and may cause the death of young persons. It appears that the disease cannot be transmitted by eating the flesh of infected animals.
