Measuring a Town

"SHOW me some copies of the paper published in your town and I will tell you some facts about it and your people." This is what a minister who has traveled extensively, and who served in the legislative halls of another state, said some days ago when asking the writer something about McMinville.

"The paper will show me what business opportunities are open; it may not tell me fully of professional opportunities but even these in a marked degree will be revealed. But I will scan ten copies. If I am wrong in my conclusions it will be the first time."

The stock of goods carried by the merchants, he would judge by their business capacity, by the style and amount of the advertising they employed—the paper would show him.

To know something of the pursuits of the he would scan the paper.

To know something of the pursuits of the people of the town and condition of the surrounding country, he would pursue the paper.

The home paper tells the story fully to the active, observant business man who never saw our town or people.

If the town merchants are not all represented in its columns it would spell "average business." If the social columns showed a scarcity of news and little of the social life it would spell in glaring letters "Little Doing."—McMinville News Reporter.
