THINGS VOTERS SHOULD KNOW BEFORE THEY VOTE.

It is a trifle discouraging to discuss political measures because of the fact that such a discussion is wasted effort so far as a large number of readers are concerned. Yet those discussions should receive serious attention, with the day upon which every elector should vote intelligently only three weeks away. The Sentinel ventures the prediction that not over 5 per cent of the voters know at this time how they are going to mark their ballots upon November 4. It ventures the further prediction that not over 25 per cent will know at the moment they enter the polling booth. It predicts still further that the day after election 25 per cent will not know exactly how their ballots were cast.

The regrettable lack of interest in the matters which the voters must decide is the main reason why there is kicking about the government—our government—the kind of government which we ourselves provide.

Those who do not vote, or who do not know how they voted, make the biggest noise about how rotten the government is. Those who do not know how they are going to vote upon the dozen measures upon which they have to act, or, if the election is over, how they cast their ballots, do the most howling about the kind of laws the legislature passes or fails to pass.

Regardless of whether the voters do their part in fully posting themselves before going to the polls, The Sentinel will follow its usual policy of explaining the measures that will be on the ballot and discussing the qualifications of candidates. The discussion will be spread over the three issues to be published between now and election day—two issues following this one.

The Oleo Bill.
This measure was enacted by the legislature and referred to the people through the referendum. In the legislative halls it was supported by practically all members from the dairy districts of the state and was opposed by those from Portland. It is one of the most misunderstood of the several measures upon which the people will have to act.

Simply told, the measure provides that butter substitutes shall be sold as such and as nothing else. More elaborately told, the measure provides that the dairy industry shall not have as a competing industry one whose success depends upon mixing with its product the product of the industry with which it competes.

So far as The Sentinel knows there is no real butter substitute sold in the state as such. It is mixed with milk or other dairy product to make it more palatable. If not mixed with milk products the sales would be greatly reduced, otherwise there would not be any contention over the oleo bill, which simply provides that butter substitutes can not use dairy products as a part of the ingredients.

The oleo bill does not attempt to in any way restrict the sale of any butter substitute when sold on its merits as such.

Workmen's Compensation Amendment.

This is proposed by initiative petition upon the part of those who have been characterized as the communistic group of labor leaders in Portland. The amendment undoubtedly is well intentioned but it is a dangerous piece of legislation—dangerous in the things that are possible under it but probably not intended by those who initiated it. It carries several jokers.

The industrial accident commission, under this amendment, would have full power to make rates and regulations and its acts would not be subject to review by the courts. It would be easily possible for the commission to make unbearable the rates or conditions imposed upon any industry, or all industry.

In the case of injury of an employe, the commission would decide whether or not the employe should receive compensation, and how much. There would be no appeal from such decision. It is presumed that the commission would decide these things according to the evidence and attempt to give justice to all, but that is too much power to put into the hands of any body of three men. We might get a commission who had no other idea than to soak industry, or we might get a commission who had no sympathy for the employe. There is no telling what character of man may be governor of Oregon, or who he may appoint as members of the industrial accident commission.

The compensation law has saved the lumber industry of Oregon. It is working fairly satisfactorily to both employe and employer. It would be inviting disaster to amend it in the radical manner that is now proposed.

In case the defects should be found that have been pointed out as possible, three years might be required to amend, for the amendment provides that after its enactment there can be no amendment by the legislature except by reference to the people. Should an amendment be desired immediately following an adjournment of the legislature, no action could be taken until the legislature met two years later and the next general election would be a year after that.

For State Treasurer.
Those who want for state treasurer a man who has been tried and found not wanting will cast their ballots for Tom Kay, the republican nominee. The election of Kay would make Secretary of State Koser and Kay a majority on the state board of control, which seems a desirable thing.

For County Commissioner.
Voters should not forget that County Commissioner Hurd is a candidate for reelection. He was elected to take the place of Commissioner Sharp, whose term would have expired January 1. Mr. Hurd has proved an efficient commissioner. He can afford to hold the job and is willing to. He should be reelected.

Cottage Grove Sentinel headline reads: "Wild Cat Killed near London." What made it wild, the London fog?—Vernonia Eagle.
Nops, all its little kittens kept singing, "It Ain't Going to Rain No More."

Too often we hear expressions about "the government." Let's hear more people use the term, "our government." If you are not a party to the greatest corporation on earth, it is about time you were taking on the first degree of Americanism.—Philomath Review.
