FOR SERVICE RENDERED.

(Editorial in Oregonian.)

Marion P. Martin, middle-aged world war veteran, who was killed by a bandit during the discharge of his duties as a night watchman, appears to have done about all that could be expected of him. Certainly he proved his loyalty to his employer in a manner that is not subject to dispute. One can only regard him as a hero, as one of those commonplace heroes who are hidden in obscure callings until the moment of the great test. The Oregonian considers it significant that this man was trained and recommended by local officers of the United States Veterans' bureau. They made no error in their selection of the man for the job. Here is no lachrymal outpouring for Marion P. Martin. He would be the last man in the world to bespeak tears for himself. Why, it is apparent that he falsified his own age in order to get a chance to fight for America.

What a peculiar opportunity this is to call attention to the work of the bureau and to the fact that it is even now training veterans for jobs that are urgently needed. We shall not neglect it. For example the bureau, here in Portland, is seeking employment for a man who spent 22 years of his life with the flag. He was a soldier, and he is past his years of active service. But even if he were not they wouldn't want him in the army. It so happened that, one day in France, an enemy machine-gunner sprayed him with lead, and when he went to the rear his left arm was shattered beyond repair. Yes, he is out of work. That he is out of work warrants this allusion to him. At the bureau it is thought he would make a courageous watchman. His old regiment yet remembers him as a fine pistol shot.

And there are many others. The local branch of the bureau turns them out, fitted for this or that employment, at the rate of a dozen a month. Clerks, mechanics, bookkeepers, watchmen like Marion

P. Martin, all of them a bit broken by the war but rather serviceably mended and alike eager to come to grips with a real job. Come to think of it, we cheered them when they went away.

Nightwatchman Martin practically "got" his man before he gave up his own life. Of such are the modest heroes made. They lose their lives in service.—Oregonian.

Cleaning Crystals with Alcohol

The sensitiveness of a crystal determines to a great extent the receiving range of a set. Some crystals are much better than others in this respect, but even good ones are soon spoiled by improper care. Air causes the surface of the crystal to oxidize gradually, which of course decreases its efficiency. Dust particles in the air also lodge on the surface and adhere to it. The most trouble is, however, caused by handling the crystal, as the oil on the hands and fingers, which is imperceptible to the naked eye, insulates the surface of the crystal, and for this reason crystals should never be touched. An excellent method of cleaning crystals, which will in many cases restore the original sensitiveness, is to give them a bath in alcohol, using an old toothbrush to scrub them.

Salt Is Tougher than Steel

Strands of wire made from ordinary rock salt by a Russian chemist are reported to be tougher than those of steel. The inventor expects the process to aid in hardening and strengthening common metals, and believes that the treatment, if applied to other minerals, may result in materials that would permit moving machinery to travel at much greater speeds. The scientist is said to put raw rock salt under high heat pressures, thus changing its form and increasing its flexibility and strength.

FIRST WOMAN TO BE DIPLOMATIC ENVOY

Appointment by Russia Makes New Step.

Washington, D. C.—The recent promotion of Madame Alexandra Kollontai to be the full-fledged 'envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary' from Soviet Russia to Norway at the same time that Professor Timothy A. Smiddy is given a similar position in Washington from heretofore 'envoyless Ireland, makes diplomatic history," says a bulletin from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Geographic society.

"Madame Kollontai is the first feminine 'minister plenipotentiary' to enter the diplomatic corps," continues the bulletin, "since that specific position and body were recognized by the congress of Vienna in 1815 and the follow-up congress of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1818; and she is one of the very few women ever to become an envoy of a sovereign state. Catherine of Aragon is the most famous predecessor of Madame Kollontai, and she hardly deserves a similar classification. While she was princess of Wales, her father, Ferdinand the Catholic, named her his ambassador to the court of Henry VII. It was a hollow honor, largely to increase her prestige with the English.

Woman Minister Real Worker.
"Madame Kollontai is considered to have won her laurels by real work on behalf of her government while serving for the past two years as charge d'affaires in Norway. She successfully negotiated recognition of the Soviet government by Norway, settled the controversy between the two countries over Spitsbergen, and obtained an official Norwegian guarantee of Soviet credit in purchasing huge supplies of fish for Russia.

"The appointment of Professor Smiddy is somewhat less precedent-smashing. From the sixteenth century until the beginning of the Nineteenth the component states of the so-called Holy Roman empire sent envoys to foreign courts. The situation was not entirely parallel with that of the modern British 'empire,' however, for the 'Holy Roman emperor, was never represented by envoys—on the theory that his dignity was too great. The simultaneous existence now of an ambassador from an over-state and a minister from one of its component parts, sets a true precedent.

"The growth of the diplomatic corps as an institution has been slow. Special envoys undoubtedly were sent from court to court of the earliest historic empires such as those of Egypt and Babylonia. Later in Grecian, Roman and Byzantine days the practice was fairly common. But in all such cases, as far as history discloses, the messengers were sent to transact specific business and returned as soon as possible to report the results of their mission.

"In the west the republic of Venice seems to have been the pioneer in the establishment of embassies. In the Twelfth and Thirteenth centuries the terms of Venetian envoys were limited to two or three months. Strict rules hedged them round. Any gifts received from courts visited must be turned over to the republic and written reports had to be filed with the senate. In the Fifteenth century the ambassadorial term was extended to a maximum of two years and in the Sixteenth century, to three years.

First Embassies in Italy.
"The earliest record of the appointment of a resident ambassador—though probably this was not the first ambassador so appointed—was in regard to the sending in 1455 of an envoy from the Duke of Milan to reside at Genoa. One of the first permanent embassies outside Italy was created in 1494 when Milan sent a minister to take up his residence at the court of France. In the same year a Spanish ambassador went to reside in London. This is believed to be the oldest surviving diplomatic post in existence. By the second half of the Sixteenth century resident embassies had become the normal means of intercourse between important countries.

"The term, 'ambassador,' was given to the world by Venice where it first appeared in the form 'ambaslatore' in a decree of 1268. At first there were no degrees among the envoys of states. The ambassador was considered the vicar of his sovereign and was received with royal honors and had to maintain a sort of little court. This became embarrassing both because of the expense and because it was a handicap in attending to business. The custom grew, therefore, of sending less important individuals as envoys or messengers. These, not hedged about by pomp, proved much more efficient agents. Later again it became customary to accord the rank of the envoy to the importance of the country sending or receiving him, and a gradation in representatives grew up."

Site of Bat Cave to Be Held

Washington.—Discovery of mineral deposits in Bat cave in Arizona has prompted the Interior department to retain for the government the site, embracing about 500 square feet, which was sought by the Santa Fe railroad. Mineral in the form of guano, it was explained, is reported to be present in large deposits, and the original rock debris in the cave appears to be saturated with nitrates and phosphates. The mineralization is ascribed to the fact that the cave for many years has been the breeding place for millions of bats.

There's nothing more annoying than kidney weakness or inability to properly control the kidney secretions. Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys—have brought peace and comfort to many Cottage Grove people. Profit by this Cottage Grove resident's experience: J. H. Baker, proprietor of blacksmith shop, Pacific highway, says: "I have used Doan's Pills with benefit and am glad to endorse them. I was troubled with attacks of kidney trouble and my back was weak and lame. My kidneys annoyed me, too, by acting irregularly. Doan's Pills always helped me when I used them, strengthening my back and kidneys."
